‘TREAT EVERY PATIENT AS A PERSON, NOT JUST A DIAGNOSIS’: PROF. RAJESH SHENOY

Physiotherapy graduates should treat every patient as a person before viewing them as a diagnosis, remain lifelong learners and build their reputation through compassion and dedication, Prof. Rajesh Shenoy, Member, National Commission for Allied and Healthcare Professions and President, Karnataka Allied and Healthcare Professions Associations, said.

Addressing the graduation ceremony of JSS College of Physiotherapy here on Friday, Prof. Shenoy congratulated the Class of 2026 and urged the graduates to recognise the significant responsibility they were assuming as healthcare professionals. “Your hand is the tool of your trade,” he said, asking the graduates to look at their hands before receiving their degrees.

He noted that the trained hands of a physiotherapist could help a patient walk again, enable a mother to lift her child without pain, help an athlete return to sport and restore independence to the elderly.

Prof Shenoy said physiotherapy had become increasingly important in modern healthcare as advances in technology, surgery and artificial intelligence transformed medicine. With shorter hospital stays and faster surgical procedures, the responsibility of helping patients regain strength, mobility and confidence increasingly rested with physiotherapists. “You are not an adjunct to medicine. You are very often the difference between a patient who survives an illness and a patient who truly recovers from it,” he said.

He asked graduates to remember three principles throughout their careers. First, they should treat every patient as an individual rather than merely as a medical condition. Clinical expertise, he said, could restore movement, but empathy and humanity gave patients the confidence to continue their recovery.

Second, they must remain students throughout their professional lives. Medical evidence, treatment protocols and rehabilitation techniques would continue to evolve, making continuous learning essential. Third, a professional’s reputation was built during moments when nobody was watching or grading. Spending extra time reassuring a patient, patiently explaining an exercise or comforting a frightened child could make a lasting difference.

He also highlighted the quiet nature of a physiotherapist’s success, saying it was often measured not in dramatic moments but in small improvements achieved over weeks and months. “Somewhere, months from now, a person you treated will walk their daughter down the aisle, or bowl a cricket ball again, or simply get up from a chair without wincing,” he said.

Prof. Shenoy thanked the parents and families for their sacrifices and appreciated the faculty of JSS College of Physiotherapy for shaping students into compassionate and competent professionals.

He urged the graduates to be worthy of the trust of patients, remain humble enough to learn and confident enough to use the skills they had acquired. “The people whose lives you are about to change are waiting for you. Go begin,” he said.

Dr C.G.Betsurmamath, Executive Secretary, JSS Vidyapeeta, R Mahesh and others were present.

The High Court ruled that police can freeze bank accounts during investigations under Section 106 of the BNSS 2026 without prior magistrate permission. Justice M. Nagaprasanna noted this power helps stop cyber fraud quickly, as criminals shift stolen public money instantly. While officers must report seizures immediately, court approval is only needed later for forfeiture. The ruling came after police challenged a lower court order that unfreeze accounts of JAR Gold Company in a deposit scam case. The court stressed that needing prior court consent would seriously harm fast-moving criminal investigations.

Parking crisis: Bengaluru streets now a toll road?

Bengaluru residents face outrage over proposed draft GBA parking rules imposing heavy annual fees for street parking.

CH NEWS , BENGALURU

A major political storm has erupted in Bengaluru following the Karnataka government's release of the draft Greater Bengaluru Authority (GBA) Parking Rules, 2026, which proposes heavy annual fees for residents parking their vehicles on public roads outside their homes. Under the newly issued draft guidelines, vehicle owners utilizing public streets for residential parking will need to purchase an annual permit. The proposed fee structure scales according to the size of the vehicle, requiring ₹15,000 per year for hatchbacks, ₹20,000 for sedans, and up to ₹25,000 annually for sports utility vehicles (SUVs). Furthermore, the rules specify that these permits will only be issued to residents whose buildings comply with standard on-site parking building bye-laws. The policy has drawn fierce backlash from opposition figures

Public grievances

Poor Infrastructure: Citizens question the moral right of authorities to collect parking fees when city roads remain plagued by deep potholes and waterlogging during heavy monsoon rains.

Priorities Questioned: Critics demand that the administration focus instead on fixing public transport, speeding up delayed metro projects, and adding more buses to the existing fleet.

ures and local residents, who slammed the move as an anti-people measure and an unfair financial burden. Critics have questioned the rationale of imposing steep taxes on vehicle owners for street parking when municipal bodies have struggled to maintain basic civic infrastructure, pointing to persistent issues with pothole-ridden roads and waterlogging during the monsoon season. Public anger has also centered on demands for improved public transport infrastructure such as faster metro expansion and a higher volume of BMTC buses before rolling out measures that penalize daily commuters and residents. The Urban Development Department formally published the draft notification on

Public demands immediate rollback

The general public and political critics are urging the government to scrap this anti-people policy immediately. Warnings have been issued that failure to withdraw the proposed rules will lead to strong political consequences during the upcoming GBA elections. Residents argue that authorities must prioritize repairing damaged city infrastructure and improving public transit systems before attempting to squeeze everyday vehicle owners for more money. The controversy highlights a growing frustration among urban taxpayers regarding rising municipal costs and inadequate civic amenities across the tech capital.

Why did Horatti resign? Chalavadi demands clarity

CH NEWS , BENGALURU

A fierce debate erupted in the Karnataka Legislative Council as opposition leaders demanded official clarification regarding the circumstances surrounding the recent resignation of former Chairman Basavaraj Horatti. Speaking during the session, Leader of the Opposition in the House Chalavadi Narayanaswamy raised serious questions directed at the government. While offering congratulations to the newly elected Council Chairman, Salim Ahmed, Narayanaswamy alleged that pressure had been applied to force Horatti out of office. He pointed out that while Horatti had previously expressed his desire to formally announce his decision and share his views on the floor of the house, media reports indicated he was compelled to sign and step down prematurely under political duress. The opposition demanded to know whether undue influence was exerted and sought a direct statement from the government. Responding to the queries, Minister Basavaraj Rayareddy urged members to maintain decorum and respect the dignity and long-standing history of the Legislative Council. He noted that the new chairman had been elected by a clear majority of the House and suggested that discussions should remain within proper legislative boundaries. The proceedings witnessed brief disruptions as opposition members complained about audio issues with the microphones. In response, a visibly unwell Rayareddy interjected, explaining that technical systems were functioning fine, but he was struggling to speak at a higher volume due to running a fever.

"Son of the soil": DKS praises Deve Gowda

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

Chief Minister D.K. Shivakumar paid rich tributes to former Prime Minister H.D. Deve Gowda in the Vidhan Parishad, acknowledging his lifelong struggles and monumental contributions toward the welfare of the farming community and the overall development of Karnataka. Addressing the House, Shivakumar emphasized that Deve Gowda earned the proud title of "son of the soil" through decades of relentless hard work, pointing out that the veteran leader designed numerous vital irrigation schemes and constructed Bangalore's very first flyover during his tenure. While noting that political rivalries naturally exist between the ruling party and leaders like H.D. Kumaraswamy, the Chief Minister made it clear that good governance requires acknowledging valuable ideas regardless of political lines. He specifically highlighted Kumaraswamy's visionary urban development proposals, including the construction of the Bidadi Township, the Peripheral Ring Road (PRR), and other satellite township concepts aimed at easing congestion in the state capital. He noted that although time constraints or administrative hurdles prevented some of those blueprints from being fully executed back then, the underlying infrastructure concepts remain solid.

Shifting focus to recent political friction, Shivakumar remarked that political pressure sometimes forces opposition figures like Kumaraswamy into unnecessary public sparring, but stated that such tactics would not deter him from his vision. Stressing a collaborative approach to serving the public, he urged all members of the legislature to put aside daily political disputes once inside the House. He called

The best plan in Deve Gowda's time

Bengaluru is expanding fast as workers arrive from the Northeast. Building new satellite cities is the only way to support this massive population growth. Past leaders planned smart industrial hubs during their terms. Peenya came up under Veerendra Patil, Bidadi under Deve Gowda, and Electronic City under Veerappa Moily. These great leaders showed true vision. People often spread rumors and gossip behind closed doors. We should always trust what we see with our own eyes instead of false talk. Strong planning from earlier decades proves that building new urban centers is essential for a bright future.

upon leaders from all political spectrums to cooperate in fulfilling shared dreams for the state's progress, leaving election-style politics outside the legislative doors while focusing entirely on constructive public service together.

Gutka ban will harm farmers, says Vijayendra

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) State President B.Y. Vijayendra has strongly criticized the state government's recent decision to ban gutka, warning that it threatens the livelihood of millions of arecanut farmers and creates unnecessary panic across agricultural belts. Addressing a press conference at Vidhana Soudha, Vijayendra pointed out that Karnataka is a primary hub for arecanut cultivation, accounting for roughly 6.76 lakh hectares out of the country's total 9.49 lakh hectares. Highlighting the crop's economic footprint, he noted that the state generates a major share of the national GST revenue from the sector, contributing over ₹450 crore out of the total ₹600 crore. He argued that despite knowing how heavily millions of rural families depend on this cash crop, the administration's sudden policy moves risk destabilizing the farming community. Vijayendra announced that a high-level delegation, including representatives from various grower organizations and CAMPCO, will meet with state leaders to demand a reconsideration of the move. He stressed that the party will staunchly oppose any measure that inflicts financial hardship on farmers without prior consultation.

Karnataka HC questions Lokayukta on Kcharge trust

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

The Karnataka High Court has issued an official notice to the Lokayukta Police concerning a petition challenging the alleged illegal allotment of a civic amenity plot to the Siddhartha Vihara Trust, which is linked to AICC President Mallikarjuna Kcharge and his family members. A single-judge bench presided over by Justice M. Nagaprasanna heard the petition filed by Vijayaraghava Marathe, the state president of the Bribery-Free Karnataka Forum. During the proceedings, the petitioner's legal counsel argued that the trial court erred by deciding to conduct its own inquiry rather than handing over the investigation to the Lokayukta Police under the Prevention of Corruption Act. After reviewing the submissions, the bench issued formal notices to the anti-corruption watchdog and scheduled the next hearing for Tuesday.

The legal controversy stems from allegations that the Siddhartha Vihara Trust described in the complaint as a secular entity wrongfully secured an 8,125-square-meter civic amenity site in Banashankari under the Scheduled Caste quota by providing misleading information. The petitioner claims that political influence was leveraged during the allotment process and that the trust subsequently received an irregular 50% discount on lease amounts in connivance with Bangalore Development Authority (BDA) officials. Further allegations highlight that an alternative high-value property near BTM Layout was transferred to the trust, yet no mandatory construction work took place within the stipulated three-year period. Although the trust previously returned a separate plot allotted in the Devanahalli Aerospace Park following public scrutiny, petitioners are pressing for a thorough criminal investigation into both land allocation controversies.

Mandya officials told to ensure accurate crop data

CH NEWS, MANDYA
Zilla Panchayat Chief Execu-tive Officer Nandini K.R. has instructed officials to conduct crop harvest surveys accurat-ely and scientifically amid re-duced rainfall this year. She said reliable survey data would help assess actual crop yields, farmer losses and the government's compensa-tion and insurance measures. Speaking at a training pro-gramme in Malavalli taluk on Friday, Nandini said officials must complete the survey within the prescribed period without errors. She directed staff to personally visit select-ed fields, identify sample ar-eas according to rules, harvest crops and weigh the produce accurately. All required information must also be entered correctly in the survey appli-cation. The CEO also reviewed pending audit claims of vari-ous Gram Panchayats in Malavalli taluk during an ad hoc committee meeting. She instructed officials to examine outstanding claims according to government guidelines, prepare supporting documents and take necessary steps to clear them quickly. Officials were told to give priority to claims that had remained pending unnecessarily. Nandini later reviewed the implementation of the e-office system at the Taluk Panchayat office. She directed the Executive Officer to ensure that all of-fice files are processed

Chitradurga Zilla Panchayat starts Praja Seva Shakha

CH NEWS, CHITRADURGA
The Chitradurga Zilla Pancha-yat has started a Praja Seva Shakha to provide time-bound solutions to rural residents' grievances. Zilla Panchayat CEO Dr. Akash said the existing Grama Phone free helpline, 1800-425-1978, has been brought under the new service to improve public support and grievance handling. The helpline has been oper-ating since November last year and has received 2,747 calls related to the Rural De-velopment Department. Offi-cials said the response shows that residents are increasingly using the service to report problems and seek govern-ment assistance without having to visit offices repeatedly. Of the total complaints, 948 were related to the e-Asset scheme, making it the largest category. Another 444 calls concerned the MGNREGA or VB GRAM G, scheme, while 402 complaints involved rural drinking water services. San-itation-related issues account-ed for 204 calls, and 749 calls concerned other matters. To strengthen the system, one nodal officer has been ap-pointed in every taluk. Com-plaints received through the helpline will be forwarded to the concerned Gram Pancha-yat Development Officer through the official login sys-tem. The officers will then take action and work towards resolving the reported prob-lems.

Dr. Akash said the Praja Seva Shakha would help provide better services and make grievance redressal more ef-fective for people in rural ar-eas. He encouraged residents to continue using the free helpline whenever they face difficulties related to govern-ment services or rural devel-opment programmes. Officials said the Grama Phone service will continue under the Praja Seva Shakha in the coming days. The administration expects the strengthened system to improve coordination be-tween rural residents, Gram Panchayats and taluk-level officials, while helping ensure complaints receive timely at-tention and practical solu-tions.

ONE-YEAR GUTKA BAN NOT ENOUGH, SAYS SALADAPURA

CH NEWS, KOPPAL
Karnataka State Liquor Con-trol Board Chairman Sha-ranappa Saladapura welcomed the state government's deci-sion to ban the production, storage, sale and distribution of gutka and paan masala for one year. He described the move as an important step to-wards protecting public health and building a healthier soci-ety. Saladapura said the ban was necessary because regular consumption of gutka, paan masala and tobacco products has been linked to serious dis-eases, including oral cancer.

However, he urged the govern-ment to make the prohibition permanent instead of limiting it to one year. He said protect-ing people's health should re-main a long-term priority. He also demanded strict ac-tion against people involved in illegally producing, storing, transporting and selling gutka and paan masala. Continuous raids should be conducted across the state, and offenders should face strong legal action, he said. Such measures, he added, would help prevent banned products from reach-ing consumers through illegal channels.

Farmers demand early completion of Bhadra Project

CH NEWS, CHITRADURGA
The Irrigation Implementation Struggle Committee has criti-cised objections raised by some Davanagere farmers against releasing 5.7 TMC of Bhadra water to the Chitradu-rga Bhadra Upper Bank Proj-ect. Committee working pres-ident B.A. Lingareddy said farmers should instead press the government to complete the project quickly. Lingareddy said the project has been allocated 17.50 TMC from the Tunga reser-voir and 12.45 TMC from the Bhadra reservoir. He noted that the Bhadra reservoir cur-rently has water up to 173 feet, while at least 144 feet is required for the project. He questioned what Davanagere farmers would lose by lifting the proposed water. The committee said the project will fill 367 lakes across four districts, helping raise groundwater levels and improve drinking water avail-ability. It claimed farmers in drought-prone Chitradurga have traditionally used water carefully and urged Davana-gere farmers to follow better water management practices. The statement also referred to the original irrigation agreement, under which only one semi-irrigated crop was permitted, with crops such as sorghum, sunflower and maize.

Neer Lab has focused on collecting evidence before planning new interventions. A survey covering 1,559 villag-es and habitations across 189 Gram Panchayats in six taluks measured actual drinking wa-ter supply. It found 550 loca-tions receiving less than the prescribed 55 litres per person daily. Of these, 40 received below 25 litres, while 510 re-ceived between 26 and 55 li-tres. Officials said the findings will help identify villages needing source augmentation and better investment. The district has also assessed sol-id-waste generation and mapped groundwater sources for risks involving TDS, fluo-ride and nitrate. The informa-tion is expected to support targeted action and improve water security. Neer Lab will operate as a zero-cost PMU using the ex-isting government system, rather than creating a separate administrative structure. Offi-cials said the model aims to turn evidence into better pri-orities and faster implementa-tion. The long-term goal is to make drinking-water shortag-es more predictable, prevent-able and manageable across Chitradurga.

OUR COUNTRY’S INDEPENDENCE, OUR ARMED FORCES’ SACRIFICE, OUR DUTY: STAND UNITED AND BE PROUD TO BE INDIAN.

There are some mornings when a nation should pause. August 15 is one of them. As the Indian tricolour rises into the morning sky, millions of Indians will celebrate the freedom that generations before us fought, struggled and sacrificed for. There will be patriotic songs, ceremonies, speeches and the familiar sight of a nation coming together beneath its flag. But Independence Day should be more than a celebration. It should also be a moment of reflection. What does freedom mean? Who protected it? What are we doing with it? And what kind of India are we preparing for the generations that will come after us? Behind the freedom we experience every day is a long history of courage and sacrifice. And even today, while most of us live our ordinary lives, the men and women of the Indian Armed Forces continue to carry an extraordinary responsibility. While we sleep safely in our homes, they stand guard. While families gather around dinner tables, some of our soldiers, sailors and air warriors are serving far from home. At some of the world’s most demanding frontiers, in the skies above our nation and across the waters surrounding our shores, they endure difficult terrain, extreme weather, isolation, exhaustion and danger. They do it because duty demands it. Their greatest achievement is often not fighting a war. It is helping ensure that we do not have to. A strong Armed Forces is an instrument of peace. Readiness creates deterrence. Strength protects sovereignty. Professionalism gives diplomacy greater weight. Vigilance allows millions of Indians to live, work, travel, build businesses, educate their children and plan their futures without having to think constantly about the dangers beyond our borders. That freedom is not accidental. It is protected every day. And for that, India owes its Armed Forces more than applause. We owe them respect, gratitude and the commitment to ensure that those who protect the country have the training, equipment, technology and support they need. But we must also remember the families behind the uniform. Every soldier, sailor and air warrior is someone’s son or daughter, husband or wife, father or mother. Their service often means long periods of separation, missed birthdays and festivals, and moments shared from a distance. For the families of our martyrs, that sacrifice is permanent. Behind every name we remember is a life, a family and a future that was left unfinished. We must honour that sacrifice not only through ceremonies, but through lasting remembrance, dignity and support for the families who continue to carry its weight. They served India, and their families became part of that service too. Independence Day also reminds us that national strength is not measured only by military capability. It is measured by the character of the people. India is one of the world’s great civilizational and democratic nations because of its extraordinary diversity. We come from different states and regions. We speak different languages. We follow different traditions and beliefs. We have different political opinions and different ideas about India’s future. That diversity is not a weakness. It is India. We do not have to think alike to belong to the same country. We do not have to agree on everything to stand together. Democracy requires disagreement. It requires debate, criticism and the freedom to question those who govern us. But disagreement must never become hatred. Political differences must never become an excuse to dehumanise another Indian. Our identities must never become weapons against one another. We can be proud of our state, our language, our culture, our faith and our heritage while being equally proud of the country we share. That is what unity means. Not uniformity. Unity means having the maturity to disagree without destroying one another. It means understanding that our differences are part of India, not alternatives to India. A nation can possess advanced weapons, powerful aircraft, sophisticated satellites and modern military systems and still become weaker if its people lose confidence in one another. National unity is itself a form of national strength. And India must also look ahead. The security environment of the future will not resemble the conflicts of the past. Artificial intelligence, drones, autonomous systems, cyber warfare, satellites, electronic warfare, advanced surveillance, precision weapons and emerging technologies are transforming the nature of conflict. India cannot prepare only for yesterday’s threats. We must prepare for tomorrow. That requires investment in research, innovation, indigenous defence manufacturing, advanced technology and a strong national ecosystem connecting the Armed Forces with scientists, engineers, universities, entrepreneurs, industry and government. We should want our Armed Forces to have the best capabilities India can develop. Not simply because we want to be powerful, but because preparedness helps preserve peace. And this is where India’s youth have an important role. India’s youth will inherit the India we build today. They may serve the nation in different ways through the Armed Forces, science, technology, entrepreneurship, research, public service or simply through responsible citizenship. What matters is that they understand the value of the freedom they have inherited, respect those who protect it and recognise that India’s security and progress will increasingly depend on knowledge, innovation, technology and national confidence. The young people of India should not only inherit our freedom. They should have the opportunity, the confidence and the determination to carry India forward. Patriotism cannot end with a flag ceremony or the emotion we feel when the national anthem plays. It is reflected in what we do when the anthem ends — how we treat another Indian, how we respect the Constitution and our democratic institutions, how we handle disagreement, and how seriously we take our responsibility to contribute to India’s progress. To love India is not to believe that it is perfect; it is to believe that it is worth improving, and to have the confidence and commitment to help build the country we want future generations to inherit. And perhaps that is the simplest expression of patriotism: I am Indian. There is nothing ordinary about that identity. India is a country of extraordinary complexity and extraordinary possibility. We have inherited a civilisation that has survived centuries of change, a democracy of enormous scale and a society whose diversity cannot be captured in a single description. To be proud of India does not mean believing that India is perfect. It means believing that India is worth improving. It means having enough confidence in our country to acknowledge its challenges and enough commitment to work toward solving them. It means being proud of where we have come from while remaining ambitious about where we can go. This Independence Day, let us remember the freedom fighters who gave everything to make independence possible. Let us honour the men and women of the Armed Forces who continue to protect the country. Let us remember our martyrs and the families who carry their sacrifice. Let us respect and support our veterans. Let us give our Armed Forces the technology and capabilities required for the challenges ahead. Let us ensure that our young people understand the importance of protecting what previous generations fought to give us. And let us build a country in which every citizen understands that freedom comes with responsibility. The tricolour will rise again this August 15. It will fly over cities and villages, schools and universities, homes and offices, military establishments and public institutions. Beneath it will stand Indians who speak different languages, follow different traditions, come from different regions and hold different political opinions. But the flag belongs equally to all of them. And so does the country. We may disagree about politics. We may see India’s future differently. We may come from different parts of this vast nation. But we must never allow those differences to become greater than our shared identity. We are Indians. So when the tricolour rises, let us remember not only what previous generations sacrificed to give us freedom, but what we must do to preserve and strengthen it. Let us honour those who served India by building an India worthy of their service. An India that is secure. An India that is technologically capable. An India that is prosperous. An India that is democratic. An India that respects its diversity. An India that stands united. And an India whose young people are ready to carry its future forward. Our country gave us independence. Our Armed Forces continue to protect it. Our martyrs paid the highest price for it. The responsibility now belongs to all of us. Not to one community. Not to one generation. Not to one political party. To all of us. So let us be proud of India. Let us stand together for India. Let us work for India. Let us prepare India for the future. And let us never forget those who gave everything so that we could live free. On this Independence Day, let our pride be sincere, our gratitude enduring, our unity stronger than our differences and our commitment to India’s future unmistakable. Be proud to be Indian. Stand united. Carry India forward. Jai Hind.

BEGINNINGS WITHOUT FIREWORKS

We are conditioned to expect life-defining shifts to arrive with fanfare. We wait for grand reveals, dramatic announcements, and cinematic transformations that signal we have finally stepped into a new era of our lives. But reality rarely works in spectacles. The most profound chapters of our lives do not start with a bang; they begin in silence, creeping in softly without a single firework in the sky.

Sometimes, a life-altering beginning arrives disguised as something ordinary, even intimidating: a nervous morning ride on a scooter, a sudden opportunity to speak in front of a crowded classroom, or a quiet, persistent whisper in your mind asking, “Will I be able to do this?”

The Distance Between Who We Were and Who We Become. A few months ago, excitement felt simple. It was tied to a seemingly minor milestone: traveling on my own for the very first time. On the surface, it was just a short commute a brief daily ride on a scooter to an internship setting. But looking back, that brief transit was far more than a physical trip from point A to point B.

Every turn of the handlebars, every lane change, and every moment spent navigating traffic independently served as a bridge. It measured the distance between the person I used to be hesitant, cautious, relying on familiar safety nets and the person I was gradually becoming. When we step into unfamiliar territory, even on a small scale, space opens up for personal evolution. When the internship wrapped up a month later, I packed my bags to return home. On paper, I had earned a certificate of completion—a piece of cardstock documenting my hours and duties. But in reality, what I carried home could never fit into a folder or frame:

Independent Agency: The quiet assurance that comes from navigating travel alone without relying on a guiding hand.

Vocal Courage: The capability to stand at the front of a room without trembling hands or a shaky voice, learning to speak up when my default instinct had always been to stay silent and listen.

Instinctive Trust: A newfound faith in my own judgment and decisions, rather than looking around the room for validation.

Ownership: A willingness to embrace responsibility proactively rather than waiting for someone else to take the lead.

The Anatomy of Quiet Courage, growth is rarely an overnight miracle. Through these modest, daily challenges, a deeper truth came into focus: patience isn’t something we are born with. It isn’t an innate trait bestowed upon a lucky few; it is a muscle built quietly through practice, repetition, and time. Similarly, courage is often misunderstood. We tend to picture bravery as loud, heroic, and triumphant. But true courage is much softer. Most of the time, courage doesn’t look loud at all. It looks like showing up waking up, stepping out the door, and facing the day’s tasks, every single morning, despite the lingering voice of self-doubt.

THE HARDWORKING INDIAN

None can destroy iron, but its own rust can. Likewise, none can destroy a person, but his own mind set can.” - Ratan Tata

There is a higher hemisphere at which some of our fellow Indian brothers and sisters live in, one that is free from the yoke of laziness and excuses, a certain relentless spirit by which they abide, a drive that is self-made, they can rightfully be called, The Hardworking Indian. I took an initiative of waking up early in the recent past and found myself with time that exceeded my expectations, so much so, that I knew not what to do, my feeble mind could not comprehend a set up unencumbered by haste, but adjust I did to this routine and loved it wholeheartedly. Very early in the mornings did I wake up and go for walks around my apartment, at 4 a.m. in the freezing winter cold of December and January. I prepared rigorously before stepping out into the freeze of course, I would drink a hot cup of green tea with turmeric and pepper, so I wouldn’t get a sore throat, I would apply moisturizer on my face and palms so the dry Bangalore weather wouldn’t break my skin apart, I would wear a cap, jeans, shoes, a thick tee shirt, a hoodie and a heavy leather jacket on top of all that and then step out into the cold. Even all this jazz wasn’t enough however, as I had to rapidly walk or jog and box in the air for a few rounds around the apartment to generate enough heat in my body to endure the cold. When it is 4 a.m. in an early winter morning, the sun does not show itself for two hours or more and the cold is more chilling than the knife of Macbeth. I had thought I would be the only soul awake- but I was wrong. All around where the vehicles were parked there a few workers, cleaning the cars, in the freezing cold, wearing simple clothes with the exception of a head cap. There they were, dipping their naked hand into a bucket of freezing soap water and wiping the cars clean and spotless at 4 in the morning. After they were done with one, they went to another, then another. One particular man who works in the maintenance of the apartment, he amazes me. This man, first and foremost is deaf in both ears and does not have the ability to speak, however still, I have seen him on countless occasions, throughout the day working tirelessly in maintaining the apartment, whether it be cleaning the cars or sweeping the cement grounds with a coconut stick broom, sweeping and mopping each block, consisting of fourteen floors, including the staircase and the basement, gardening and constantly making sure that everything is at place and in check. All the while, being deaf and dumb. Through all this, he stills waves to me and smiles every time I pass by him. A true inspiration. I always thought I had an idea of what hard work was, I had always thought rest was something that individuals looked forward to and gave importance to in between bouts of hard work, I was wrong however, as my thought process stemmed from the foolish privilege perspective. I understood this of course, when I spoke with the man who barbecued meat in the food truck. During weekends, sometimes I would go to a food truck close-by and get myself some barbecued meat, it is a reward system of sorts after a hectic week, I became quite regular with a particular food truck and would strike up conversations with the man behind the grill. Once out of curiosity I asked him his daily routine, to which he told me that he wakes up in the morning, gets the meat delivery, marinates the meat, sets the truck up and arrives on location around 5:30 in the evening, starts at that time and goes on till about 1:30 a.m. midnight and repeats the routine all over again. I then asked him when he has his meals to which he said he eats at around 2 in the afternoon and at around 1:30 midnight- and that’s it. I then proceeded to ask him if he takes weekends off or any day of in the week to which he told me that he works nonstop, everyday 7 days a week, 365 days a year. That got me to thinking about the general food industry, particularly in India and especially street food. When do these people take days off? Weekends would not be possible of course due to the high demand of such foods during weekends, weekdays also could not work as crowds do gather in the evenings, they could not find too much rest during the day either due to the amount of preparation that has to be done from the meat delivery to the vegetable cutting to the marinating and setting up of the truck, and of course there is the washing and cleaning as well. All this, is of course from an outsider’s point of view, they may have even more work and things to manage, calls and orders and perhaps other businesses, one cannot expect a food truck to be a high source of income after all, especially not one that can manage an entire family.

FIX OUR BROKEN POTHOLES

The terrible condition of our local roads has become a daily hazard for commuters. Potholes are damaging vehicles and causing unnecessary traffic jams across the neighborhood. Despite repeated complaints to the municipal corporation, no concrete repair work has been initiated. We urge the authorities to take immediate action and repave these neglected streets before a major accident occurs.

STOP EXCESSIVE PLASTIC WASTE

Plastic pollution continues to choke our environment, threatening both local wildlife and public health. Despite existing bans, single-use plastics remain widely available in neighborhood markets and grocery stores. Citizens must consciously shift to eco-friendly alternatives like cloth bags and reusable containers. At the same time, the local administration needs to strictly penalize violators to protect our natural surroundings.

DO WE REALLY LOVE OUR COUNTRY?

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

Every August, the tricolour multiplies. It shows up on car bonnets, WhatsApp display pictures, terrace flagpoles, and lapel pins. We sing the anthem with a lump in the throat, share reels of soldiers at Siachen, and feel, for a few days, an uncomplicated pride in being Indian. Then August 16 arrives, the flags come down sometimes literally trampled in the street because no one thought about how to dispose of them respectfully and we go back to throwing wrappers out of car windows, jumping traffic signals, and looking away when a woman is heckled at a bus stop.

So the question is worth asking plainly: do we love our country, or do we love the idea of loving it?

Patriotism performed once a year is easy. Patriotism practiced every day in how we treat public space, public air, and each other is the harder, less photogenic version. And on three fronts in particular, civic sense, pollution, and women's safety, the gap between our declared love and our lived behaviour is impossible to ignore.

The Civic Sense Deficit
Civic sense is patriotism's daily, unglamorous cousin. It is not waving a flag; it is not littering the street you claim to love, not spitting in the stairwell of a building you call home, not honking through an ambulance's path. Yet this is precisely where collective behaviour breaks down most visibly in Indian cities. We build magnificent metro systems and then chew paan inside them. We install dustbins every few metres and still see garbage piled a foot away from them. We take pride in "New India" infrastructure while treating shared spaces as nobody's responsibility.

This isn't a character flaw unique to Indians; it's a structural and cultural failure of ownership. When public property is seen as belonging to "the government" rather than to "us," maintaining it becomes someone else's job. Real love for a country shows up in the small, unrewarded choices queuing without cutting, not dumping construction debris on the road, teaching a child to pick up their own wrapper. A nation is not just its monuments and army; it is also its footpaths, its drains, and its silence when someone jumps a queue.

The Air We're Choosing to Breathe

If civic sense is a slow leak, pollution is the crisis we've normalized despite hard evidence. In January 2026, half of the 248 Indian cities with reliable monitoring data recorded PM2.5 levels above India's own national safety standard of 60 µg/m³ and not a single city met the WHO's daily guideline of 15 µg/m³. Ghaziabad topped the list that month at a staggering 184 µg/m³, breaching the daily national standard on every single day of January. IQAir's 2025 Air Quality Report ranked India the sixth most polluted country in the world, with Delhi still among the most polluted capitals globally. In Delhi itself, the winter of 2025–26 was so severe that the average AQI in December touched 350.4, the worst since 2018, with crowds reportedly chanting "AQI!" in protest on the streets.

This is not a natural disaster; it is a manufactured one, built from stubble burning we tolerate, construction dust we ignore, and vehicle emissions we treat as an inconvenience rather than a public health emergency. An analysis by the Centre for Research on Energy and Clean Air found that nearly 44% of Indian cities face chronic, structural pollution not seasonal spikes but a permanent, degraded baseline. Meanwhile, the National Clean Air Programme's own 2026 target of a 40% reduction in PM10 from 2017 levels is now considered unreachable. We call the Ganga sacred and let industrial effluent flow into it. We call Delhi the seat of the republic and let its residents breathe air that shortens their lives by years. Loving a country while poisoning its air and rivers is not love; it is a slogan without follow-through.

The Safety We Still Owe Half the Population

No conversation about national love is honest without confronting how we treat women in public and private life. The National Crime Records Bureau's 2024 data shows 4,41,534 registered cases of crime against women; a marginal 1.5% dip from the previous year, and still nearly 4.4 lakh individual instances of harm in a single year. Cruelty by husbands or relatives remains the single largest category, accounting for over 1.22 lakh cases, 27.6% of the total. Delhi recorded the highest crime rate against women among Indian states in 2024, at 130.7 cases per lakh women, while Jaipur topped the city rankings with a rate of 199.6 per lakh.

Numbers alone don't capture the daily calculus women run: which route home is better lit, whether to share a cab alone, what time is "too late" to be outside. A 2025 national survey found India's overall safety score for women stood at 65%, with a striking 40% of women describing themselves as "not so safe" or "unsafe" in their own cities and that number climbed to 14% reporting harassment in public among women under 24. Some states have shown real improvement; Assam's crime rate against women fell from 154.3 to 59.3 per lakh between 2020 and 2024, a genuine policy success worth studying. But improvement in some pockets doesn't erase the broader picture: a country cannot claim to love its people while roughly half of them budget fear into their daily commute.

Love as a Verb, Not a Sentiment

None of this is an argument for cynicism or for loving the country less. It's an argument for redefining what love means here. Genuine patriotism isn't measured by anthem volume; it's measured by whether a woman can walk home at 9 pm without recalculating her route, whether a child growing up in Ghaziabad or Delhi gets to breathe air that doesn't stunt their lungs, and whether we treat a public park with the same care we'd give our own living room.

VIKSIT BHARAT 2047: PLAN OR JUST A SLOGAN?

SHARON FAUSTINA J
CH NEWS, BENGALURU

Say "Viksit Bharat by 2047" in any boardroom, budget speech, or WhatsApp forward in India today, and nobody blinks. It has become furniture the kind of phrase that opens Cabinet meetings, closes Republic Day speeches, and gets stamped onto everything from school murals to railway coaches. That, precisely, is the problem. When a target this audacious becomes this unremarkable, it's worth asking whether we're looking at a plan anyone is actually executing, or a mantra we've collectively agreed to stop interrogating.

The Numbers Are Real, Even if the Confidence Isn't

To be fair to the vision, it isn't vapourware. NITI Aayog's approach paper lays out a specific ambition: grow India from a $3.5–4 trillion economy into a $30 trillion one by 2047, with per capita income rising roughly eightfold to somewhere between $15,000 and $18,000. That would mean sustaining real GDP growth of 7–10% for two to three decades a feat only a handful of economies, China chief among them, have ever managed. The Economic Survey 2024–25 was more conservative but no less demanding: roughly 8% growth for a decade or two, plus the creation of 7.85 million new non-farm jobs every year through 2030. Former RBI governor C. Rangarajan recently pegged the required nominal GDP growth at 11.41% annually for the next 25 years to hit $4,012 trillion by 2047–48. These aren't slogans dressed up as statistics; they're real, published, load-bearing numbers. NITI Aayog itself estimates India needs $14.7 trillion in cumulative investment under a "current policy" scenario, rising to $22.7 trillion if the parallel net-zero-by-2070 commitment is folded. That level of specificity is exactly what a genuine plan looks like on paper. The question is whether the machinery behind the paper matches its scale.

Where the Plan Meets the Pavement

This is where the confidence cracks. Economist Surjit Bhalla, no critic of India's growth story, argues that hitting genuine high-income, "developed nation" status by the World Bank's own definition requires over 9% per capita dollar growth every year from 2025 to 2047 and that on a business-as-usual trajectory, India gets there closer to 2075, not 2047. That's not a rounding error; it's a half-century of slippage hiding inside an optimistic press release.

The employment math is even less forgiving. India's manufacturing sector the traditional escape route from the middle-income trap still employs only about 11.4% of the workforce, and non-farm job creation has actually fallen from roughly 7.7 million to 4.3 million a year even as the target calls for 10–12 million annually. Unemployment among the technically trained has climbed sharply over the last decade: from 18% to 26% for technical graduates and from 20% to 30% for postgraduates. CMIE data cited in recent commentary puts overall unemployment at 9.2%, with youth unemployment (15–29 age group) at 27.5% and female unemployment at a striking 40%. A "developed" India that can't absorb its own graduates isn't a technicality to be patched later it's the central mechanism the entire vision depends on.

Researchers modelling India's income trajectory have flagged something structurally uncomfortable: even if India climbs into the upper-middle-income bracket by 2040, the World Bank's own threshold for that category keeps moving upward from roughly $4,500 to $7,040 between 2025 and 2047 meaning India could be running hard just to stay in the same relative place, trapped in middle-income status until as late as 2070 by some estimates.

A Slogan Doing Political Work

None of this would matter as much if "Viksit Bharat" hadn't also become the BJP's central campaign motif its 2024 "Viksit Bharat Sankalp Yatra" was criticized even by government officials for blurring the line between a national development mission and a state-funded election campaign. A Wire survey of voters in Uttar Pradesh and Bihar found that despite the slogan's omnipresence, 90% of respondents named unemployment or inflation as their most pressing local problem, and most simply didn't believe development was actually underway. Opposition leaders have gone further, calling the slogan "mere rhetoric" with no fixed goals, timelines, or accountability mechanisms attached to it in Parliament.

What Would Make It Real

A plan, as opposed to a slogan, has three features a slogan doesn't: falsifiable interim milestones, public accountability when those milestones are missed, and institutional commitment that survives a change of government. Viksit Bharat has the first ingredient in scattered form NITI Aayog's numbers, the Economic Survey's job targets, sectoral roadmaps assigned to secretaries. What it visibly lacks is the second and third. Nobody in government has to answer publicly for a missed 8% growth year the way a company answers to shareholders for a missed quarter.

THE BATTLE OVER VANDE MATARAM: HOW A 150-YEAR-OLD HYMN BECAME INDIA'S NEW POLITICAL FLASHPOINT

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

On November 7, 1875, Bankim Chandra Chattopadhyay composed a hymn in a Bengali literary journal that would outlast empires, its author, and every attempt to fix its meaning. One hundred and fifty years later, India is marking that anniversary with a year-long commemoration spanning from November 2025 to November 2026. Featuring special phases timed to Republic Day, Shaheedi Diwas, and Independence Day, the celebration culminates this August 15 as the song is performed from the ramparts of the Red Fort for the first time in the ceremony's history. What should have been a moment of uncomplicated national pride has instead reopened one of the oldest, most sensitive wounds in India's political imagination: who gets to decide what a national song means, and who gets punished for hesitating before it?

A Song Born From Civilizational Fury
Vande Mataram did not begin as a neutral patriotic anthem. Bankim embedded it within his 1882 novel Anandamath, which depicts Hindu ascetics waging war against a corrupt Muslim ruler during a devastating Bengal famine. In the text, the "Mother" invoked in later stanzas is explicitly Durga—ten-armed, weapon-bearing, and forged out of civilizational fury rather than generic soil and water.

While the first two stanzas offered universal imagery that traveled easily into the freedom movement—sung by Rabindranath Tagore at the 1896 Congress session and adopted as the soundtrack to the 1905 Swadeshi movement—the later verses told a narrower story, framing Muslim rule as an antagonist to be vanquished.

By the 1930s, this ideological tension had become impossible to ignore. The Muslim League, led by Muhammad Ali Jinnah, argued that forcing the full song upon mixed legislative gatherings compelled Muslims into idol worship. In 1937, guided by Tagore's advice, the Congress Working Committee forged a historical compromise:

Adopt the first two stanzas as the official "national song."

Quietly retire the later, controversial verses.

Ensure singing the song remained strictly voluntary.

Mahatma Gandhi endorsed this approach, insisting that no single religious idiom owned Indian patriotism. This edited, voluntary version was formally adopted by the Constituent Assembly in January 1950, sitting beside Jana Gana Mana as a settlement no citizen was legally forced to sing.

The Anniversary Becomes a Courtroom

That 89-year-old settlement is precisely what is being unraveled today. In December 2025, the Lok Sabha spent nearly ten hours debating the sesquicentennial. Prime Minister Narendra Modi accused Jawaharlal Nehru and the Congress of having "broken" the song in the 1930s to appease the Muslim League, framing the 1937 compromise as a precursor to Partition. Congress leaders, including Jairam Ramesh and Priyanka Gandhi, pushed back, defending the decision as Tagore and Gandhi's wisdom rather than a betrayal, while accusing the government of rewriting history ahead of the West Bengal elections.

This political rhetoric quickly translated into state policy

Legal Status: In May 2026, the Union Cabinet granted Vande Mataram legal protection under the Prevention of Insults to National Honour Act, putting it on equal footing with the national anthem while endorsing the full six-stanza version for official functions.

Mandatory Standing: The Ministry of Home Affairs mandated that the full version be played before Jana Gana Mana at government events, making standing compulsory.

State Enforcement: Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Yogi Adityanath ordered mandatory singing across all educational institutions, warning that "new Jinnahs" emerge where hesitation is tolerated.

In municipal meetings from Hyderabad to Maharashtra, local leaders who declined to stand faced public shaming and demands to leave the country.

Two Moralities, One Archive

India's historical archive is currently being read through two opposing lenses. One views the 1937 compromise as a triumph of pluralist statecraft—a majority community voluntarily trimming its symbol to avoid casting another community as a civilizational enemy.

The competing view, now driving government policy, treats that same compromise as the original sin of minority appeasement. In this reading, concession is a slippery slope toward national betrayal, and the remedy is to restore the full text, enforce its sacredness by law, and treat hesitation as disloyalty.

Significantly, groups like the Jamiat Ulama-i-Hind have not called for a boycott. Their position mirrors the 1930s: they hold no objection to fellow citizens singing the full hymn, but request not to be personally compelled into language that addresses the homeland as a deity, which conflicts with monotheistic doctrine. Yet, this request for accommodation is increasingly met with legal penalties and accusations of treachery.

What "Uniting" Actually Requires

A song cannot unite a nation by legal fiat; it unites when citizens across diverse backgrounds freely choose to embrace it. Vande Mataram once served as a chant that made colonial rulers tremble, and millions will sing it with genuine pride this Independence Day. However, when singing becomes a state-administered loyalty test, the hymn ceases to act as a symbol of unity and becomes a tool for dividing citizens into the loyal and the suspect.

Davanagere farmers seek revival of failing lift scheme

A decade after its implementation, the lift irrigation project aimed at filling 22 lakes in Davanagere taluk is still failing to benefit farmers fully.

Despite water flowing in the Tungabhadra River, several lakes remain completely dry.

The project, launched in 2012 following years of farmers' protests, involves lifting water from the Tungabhadra River near Rajanahalli to the jackwell at Mallashettihalli and supplying it to 19 lakes. While 10-11 lakes are receiving limited water, more than eight lakes have reportedly not received even a drop. Three other lakes are covered under the Bharamasagara lift irrigation project.

Farmers from Anagodu, Hebbal, Mayakonda and surrounding areas recently gathered near the Mallashettihalli jackwell, demanding that authorities immediately operate the available pumps and supply water to the dry lakes. They alleged that poor-quality pipeline work and lack of maintenance have severely affected the project.

Farmers said filling the lakes would help recharge borewells, provide drinking water for cattle and support crops during the ongoing rainfall shortage. They also questioned why only one of the three available motors was being used despite water being available in the Tungabhadra.

Police case filed against BJP MLA's daughter

A case has been registered against Aishwarya, daughter of Tumakuru Rural BJP MLA B. Suresh Gowda, following an allegation that she assaulted a woman police officer during a temple visit in Pandavapura taluk.

The incident reportedly took place at Maramma Temple in Arati Ukkada, a popular religious site.

According to the complaint, Aishwarya visited the temple with others on August 12 to perform a special puja on the occasion of Bhima Amavasya. PSI Savita B. Patil of the Mandya Women's Police Station was deployed for security duty at the temple. The complaint alleges that a confrontation occurred when Aishwarya tried to enter the sanctum sanctorum around 4.30 pm.

Savita B. Patil alleged that Aishwarya used abusive language and assaulted her while she was performing her official duty. Following the complaint, the Catanahalli Police Station in Pandavapura taluk registered an FIR against Aishwarya under Sections 132, 115(2), 352 and 351(2) of the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita. The allegations are now subject to police investigation.

Police officials are expected to examine the circumstances surrounding the incident and record statements from those present at the temple.

The case has drawn attention because of Aishwarya's family connection to a sifting BJP MLA.

Authorities will determine the facts based on the complaint, available evidence and statements collected during the investigation. Further action will depend on the findings of the inquiry and applicable legal procedures. Officials have not indicated any final conclusion regarding the allegations, and the investigation remains ongoing as authorities work to establish what happened at the temple.

HUDA STEPS IN TO REVIVE NEGLECTED SCHOOL BUILDINGS

The Hubballi-Dharwad Urban Development Authority (HUDA) is planning to support the improvement of government school buildings and provide students with safer and better learning environments. Many government schools in the region are reportedly facing poor maintenance, with buildings lacking repairs and fresh paint. Several schools built on land donated by philanthropists have also deteriorated due to inadequate maintenance. To address the issue, HUDA has proposed a special initiative to allocate funds for repairing and improving government school buildings. The proposal was discussed at a recent general meeting of the authority, where HUDA chairman Shakir Sana-di presented the idea and received a positive response from members. MLAs and HUDA members welcomed the proposal, stating that the initiative could play an important role in protecting and strengthening government schools.

SPECIAL EDUCATION DEVELOPMENT CESS

HUDA currently collects various cess and fees from layout and development activities, generating revenue for projects such as lake and garden development. Under the new proposal, a separate government school development cess could be introduced, with the funds collected being used annually to improve government schools. The proposal will be discussed further before being submitted to the state government for approval. Although the government already provides grants to schools, officials say the funds are often insufficient for major building repairs. Schools therefore depend on donations, MLA funds and corporate CSR contributions for maintenance and renovation.

PDOs demand clear rules for VB-G RAM G

Panchayat Development Officers (PDOs) have decided to boycott activities related to the Viksit Bharat-VB-G RAM G scheme from August 15, alleging that they are being subjected to undue and rule-violating pressure. The PDOs submitted a memorandum to the Dharwad Taluk Panchayat superintendent regarding their concerns.

The Karnataka State Panchayat Development Officers' Association alleged that PDOs across the state are facing unscientific and arbitrary pressure in implementing the scheme. They said the scheme lacks clear and uniform guidelines, with officials allegedly creating confusion by claiming that works permitted in one district cannot be undertaken in another.

The association also alleged that PDOs are being directed to begin works without proper tender procedures or approved action plans. They claimed officials were being pressured to create artificial NMRs even when there was no genuine demand for work.

The PDOs further alleged that they were being subjected to mental harassment through late-night meetings, show-cause notices and threats of suspension. They demanded that the government immediately issue a clear and uniform Standard Operating Procedure (SOP) for implementing the scheme. They also sought an official exemption order for works costing less than ₹5 lakh. The association warned that if their demands are not addressed by August 15, PDOs across Karnataka will stop attending meetings related to the VB-G RAM G scheme and completely boycott related activities.

Contract workers protest for job security in Haveri

Hundreds of government contract workers staged a protest in Haveri demanding job security, direct salary payments and implementation of the revised pay system for outsourced employees working across various government departments.

The protest march, organised under the leadership of the District Government Outsourced Employees' Association, began at Mailara Mahadevappa Circle and passed through Municipal High School Road, J.H. Patel Circle and DC Office Road before reaching the District Administrative Complex. The employees later staged a demonstration outside the complex. District president Gururaj Kambali said outsourced workers play an important role in the functioning of government departments but continue to face uncertainty despite serving for several years. He said the lack of employment security, proper wages and direct salary payments has made it difficult for many employees to support their families. He pointed out that the government's revised pay order, which came into effect on May 22, 2026, has not been properly implemented. As a result, many outsourced workers are struggling to pay rent, support elderly parents and meet their children's educational expenses.

Gadag residents seek relief from flooding and sewage

Residents of Hombal Naka Janata Colony in Ward 16 of Gadag-Betageri Municipality have appealed to MLA H.K. Patil to visit their neighbourhood and address longstanding civic problems.

The residents said they have struggled with poor infrastructure and basic facilities for nearly 40 years. Krishna H. Hadapada, president of the Hombal Naka Janata Colony Development Service Association, said residents hoped Patil would spend two hours in the colony to understand their difficulties. He said the community continues to face serious problems despite the country preparing to celebrate its 80th Independence Day.

Residents said internal roads are poorly connected and difficult to use, especially during emergencies. They claimed ambulances cannot reach some houses properly, forcing families to carry sick people and pregnant women to the main road. They urged authorities to improve road connectivity throughout the colony.

The colony also lacks an underground drainage system, residents said.

Wastewater and sewage reportedly flow along roads, creating unpleasant and unhealthy surroundings for families, particularly children.

Residents also raised concerns about an open Rajakaluve carrying wastewater from large parts of Gadag. They said rainwater causes the drain to overflow into homes, damaging belongings and food supplies.

According to the association, several houses have already been damaged, while the open drain and surrounding vegetation have become unsafe.

Residents appealed to Patil to include their problems in his development plans and provide permanent solutions. They said they want to celebrate Independence Day with dignity and hope that immediate action will improve their living conditions.

Gen Z protests shape
Parliament debate: RS MP

Derek O'Brien said Gen Z protests influenced Parl's political messaging, with humour and ridicule becoming effective tools

NEW DELHI

Trinamool Congress Rajya Sabha MP Derek O'Brien said the recent Gen Z-led student protests over the NEET paper leak taught parliamentarians how humour can be used in serious political communication.

O'Brien praised the role of students and youth in shaping the political debate during the Monsoon Session of Parliament. He said the protests at Jantar Mantar set the tone for what opposition MPs later raised inside the House.

"This was a session that belonged to the opposition. This was a win for the students and youth of the country," O'Brien said, adding that MPs had carried forward the issues raised by young protesters.

He said the student movement moved beyond criticism

alleged Kharge insult

The Congress on Friday held a protest march in Malappuram against the alleged insult to party president Mallikarjun Kharge during a programme in Haldwani, Uttarakhand. The protest was part of a nationwide agitation called by the All-India Congress Committee (AICC).

AICC general secretary K.C. Venugopal inaugurated the march, which began at the Malappuram Collectorate premises and ended at the Malappuram District Congress Committee office. Senior Congress leaders, ministers and a large number of party workers participated.

The protest followed allegations that a "shuddhikaran" (purification) ritual was performed at the Ram Lila Maidan stage in Haldwani after Kharge addressed a Congress rally there on August 8. Raising the issue in the Rajya Sabha, Kharge said his speech focused on public grievances and did not target any community or religion.

Kharge questioned the incident, saying, "Is this the way things should happen in a democracy? How are you protecting the Constitution?" BJP leader J.P. Nadda condemned the alleged incident and said the BJP does not support such activities. He assured that the allegations would be investigated.

Kharge later said he did not want to turn the matter into a political issue but objected to what he described as untouchability and humiliation. Vice President and Rajya Sabha Chairman C.P. Radhakrishnan also condemned untouchability and called for strict action if the allegations were found to be true. He urged the government to investigate the matter and punish those responsible.

Seven missing after China coal mine gas outburst

Changsha
Seven workers were reported missing after a gas outburst at a coal mine in Lianyuan, central China's Hunan Province, on Friday morning. One worker was receiving emergency medical treatment. The accident occurred at 5:08 a.m, when 52 people were working underground. Authorities said 44 workers safely exited the mine following the incident. Emergency responders and medical teams rushed to the site and launched rescue operations to locate the missing workers. The cause of the gas outburst remains under investigation. The incident highlights continuing safety concerns in China's coal mining sector, where authorities have tightened safety standards following several deadly accidents in recent years.

Bangladesh police arrest 53 Awami League activists

Dhaka
Bangladesh police arrested 53 leaders and activists of the Awami League and its affiliated organisations in Dhaka amid an ongoing crackdown on the party and its supporters. According to the Dhaka Metropolitan Police, the arrests took place Thursday night at a building in the Bashundhara residential area. Police said the group had gathered to organise a preparatory meeting and flash march ahead of August 15 National Mourning Day. The arrested individuals were taken into custody by Bhatara police, with legal proceedings initiated against them. The Awami League condemned the arrests, alleging political repression and accusing authorities of restricting democratic rights. The party said activists were detained merely for observing the mourning day and wearing black badges.

US threatens unprecedented economic measures on Iran

THE ANNOUNCEMENT COMES AS THE UNITED STATES SEEKS TO MAINTAIN PRESSURE ON IRAN FOLLOWING STALLED CEASEFIRE EFFORTS.

WASHINGTON

The United States is preparing to impose unprecedented economic measures on Iran, Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent said, as Washington intensifies pressure on Tehran amid continuing tensions over the Strait of Hormuz. Bessent said the planned measures would combine severe economic isolation with the continued US blockade of Iranian ports. He indicated that further details of the measures are expected to be announced next week. The announcement comes as the United States seeks to maintain pressure on Iran following stalled ceasefire efforts. US Defence Secretary Pete Hegseth has said American naval forces can sustain the blockade indefinitely by rotating ships in and out of the region. The Strait of Hormuz has become a major flashpoint in the confrontation. Shipping traffic through the strategic waterway has fallen amid heightened tensions, while recent attacks involving oil tankers have added to con-

US intensifies pressure on Iran amid stalled ceasefire

- Indefinite Naval Blockade: US Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth stated that American naval forces can sustain the blockade of Iranian ports indefinitely by rotating ships through the region.
- Energy Market Impact: Brent crude prices rose as traders braced for prolonged disruptions in the Strait of Hormuz, a critical global shipping lane for oil and LNG.
- Escalating Economic Strategy: Echoing Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent's warnings of unprecedented economic isolation, Washington aims to force Tehran's compliance as diplomatic efforts remain deadlocked cerns over the security of global energy supplies. The developments have also affected international oil markets. Brent crude rose on Friday as traders assessed the possibility of prolonged disruption around the Strait, through which a significant share of global oil and LNG shipments normally passes.

Washington's latest strategy appears aimed at increasing economic pressure while continuing military enforcement around Iranian ports. Bessent's warning signals a further escalation in the US campaign to force Tehran to accept Washington's demands, as diplomatic efforts remain stalled.

NATO jets shoot down drone over Latvian airspace

An Italian Eurofighter intercepted and destroyed the unmanned aircraft, while NATO confirmed all four jets operated under its command.

NATO fighter jets shot down a foreign drone after it entered Latvian airspace on Friday, prompting an investigation and raising fresh security concerns along the military alliance's eastern flank bordering Russia. The incident occurred in eastern Latvia amid heightened tensions linked to the ongoing Russia-Ukraine war. According to NATO, two Italian Eurofighter jets based in Lithuania and two Turkish F-16 fighter jets operating from Estonia were scrambled after the drone was detected over Latvian territory. One of the Italian Eurofighters identified and destroyed the unmanned aircraft. NATO said all four aircraft were operating under its command. Latvian authorities said the drone entered the country's airspace as a result of Russian electromagnetic warfare activity. However, officials have not yet confirmed the exact origin of the drone. Latvian soldiers were searching a wooded area near Rugaji, around 35 kilometres from the Russian border, for debris from the downed aircraft. The incident is the second time in recent months that a drone has been shot down over Latvian airspace. NATO and Baltic countries have faced a growing number of incidents involving drones crossing their airspace as Ukraine and Russia continue extensive drone operations during the war. Similar incidents have also been reported in Estonia and other neighbouring countries.Latvia's military said an air alert issued after the drone was detected was later lifted. Authorities urged residents in affected areas to remain alert while security forces searched for the wreckage.NATO spokesperson Allison Hart said the alliance was closely coordinating with Latvian authorities and that an investigation into the incident was underway. NATO reiterated that its forces remain prepared to respond to potential threats and protect the airspace of member states.The latest incident has renewed concerns among NATO's Baltic members about the possibility of the Ukraine conflict spilling over into allied territory. Officials are also monitoring the potential role of electronic warfare in diverting drones across national borders.

Count Binface becomes Britain's most successful comedy candidate

ENGLAND

Count Binface, the colourful comedy candidate known for his silver trash-can helmet and satirical political campaigns, has achieved the strongest electoral performance by a traditional joke candidate in British parliamentary history. The result came in the Clacton by-election, triggered by the resignation of Reform UK leader Nigel Farage. Farage comfortably retained the seat with 22,239 votes, accounting for 63% of votes cast. Count Binface, the fictional intergalactic character portrayed by comedian Jonathan Harvey, finished second with nearly 9,500 votes, securing around 27% of the vote. Farage did not attend the declaration ceremony, saying he had been warned that protests and disruption could take place. Binface, meanwhile, appeared at a sports centre in Clacton-on-Sea dressed in his distinctive silver-and-black costume and celebrated what he described as an unprecedented achievement for a comedy candidate.

Spain border crisis serves warning to Europe

A massive border crisis at Spain's North African enclave of Ceuta has sent shockwaves across Europe, reigniting intense debates over border security and migration control. In late July 2026, tens of thousands of migrants tried to rush across the border from Morocco by land and sea. The sheer scale of the sudden movement completely overwhelmed local police and reception centers, forcing the Spanish government to deploy military troops to restore public order.Officials are heavily investigating whether professional human-smuggling rings and organized criminal syndicates orchestrated the mass crossings. While experts warn against falsely linking all migration to terrorism, security agencies stress the vital need to screen for potential threats. Past tragic attacks in Madrid and Barcelona remind authorities that proper background checks are essential for maintaining public safety while processing arrivals fairly.The emergency at Ceuta highlights the dangerous flaws of relying on reactive measures after a crisis strikes.

Trump opens US Navy shipbuilding to foreign allies

US President Donald Trump has opened the way for foreign companies to build selected vessels for the US Navy as part of a broad plan to revive the country's shipbuilding industry, expand naval capacity and address growing construction backlogs. Under a presidential memorandum signed, overseas suppliers will be permitted to build the first two vessels in selected ship classes. However, participating companies will be required to invest in US shipyards, transfer technology and train American workers. All subsequent vessels under the programme must be built in the United States. Foreign companies taking part will also have to establish a new American shipyard or acquire a controlling stake in an existing facility. They will be required to develop US-based supply chains for ship construction and maintenance. The initiative follows a model adopted in October 2025 for medium icebreakers and could cover up to three classes of Navy and support vessels, including surface combatants, tankers and roll-on, roll-off ships. The administration said overseas sourcing would help address immediate shortages while domestic shipbuilding capacity is rebuilt. Trump blamed complex ship designs and repeated modifications for cost increases, delays and cancellations across major Navy programmes. The memorandum directs the Secretary of War to submit an acquisition plan for new surface combatants within 90 days. The proposed vessels must be capable of anti-submarine warfare, surface warfare and convoy escort operations. The Navy will face restrictions on repeatedly modifying mature foreign designs selected under the programme. Trump has also authorised the Secretary of War to approve national security waivers for military vessels to be built at foreign shipyards. Congress must be notified, and contracts cannot be signed until 30 days after lawmakers receive the determination. The order further calls for establishing a fifth public Navy shipyard, potentially with up to three dry docks capable of servicing current and future submarine classes. Officials have been given 120 days to propose possible locations, while private investment and public-private financing may also be considered.

More than 650,000 refugees and asylum seekers in South Sudan could lose access to food assistance within weeks because of a severe funding shortage, United Nations agencies warned on Friday. The World Food Programme (WFP) and UN refugee agency said urgent funding was needed to prevent an already critical humanitarian situation from worsening. South Sudan is facing one of the world's most severe hunger crises, with more than 7.8 million people, or over half the country's population, experiencing acute food insecurity. Around 2.2 million children are also suffering from acute malnutrition, according to the UN agencies. The country is simultaneously receiving around

3,000 refugees and returnees every week from neighbouring Sudan, where fighting that began in 2023 has created one of the world's largest displacement crises. Many of those arriving have fled extreme violence, hunger and insecurity.The WFP said food assistance has already been reduced to half-rations because of funding constraints. The last food distributions for the most vulnerable 240,000 refugees are expected to take place in September unless additional funding is urgently secured. If no new funding is received, UNHCR Deputy

Representative Mesfin Degefu said no refugees in South Sudan would receive food assistance from October.Families are already cutting the number of meals they eat, selling possessions, withdrawing children from school and taking on debt to survive, UN officials said. Women and children are also facing increased risks of exploitation and abuse. Some refugees have begun asking for help to return to Sudan, although UNHCR does not consider conditions there safe for return.The WFP needs $37 million to maintain refugee operations between October and December. Without additional funding, food assistance for about 180,000 internally displaced people is also expected to end from October, while around 600,000 people living in areas at risk of famine could lose life-saving support by November. UNHCR has received only 28% of the $286 million it requires for its operations this year. The funding shortage is also threatening programmes designed to help refugees become self-reliant through farming, vocational training and livelihood initiatives.

Aditya-L1 findings offer fresh clues to Sun's super-heated corona

Observations from India's Aditya-L1 solar mission have provided crucial insights into one of solar physics' biggest mysteries: how the Sun's outer atmosphere remains millions of degrees hotter than its surface and retains that heat despite constantly losing vast amounts of energy through solar eruptions, according to Indian researchers. Scientists studying data from Aditya-L1, India's first dedicated solar observation mission, have reported findings that could help explain the long-standing mystery of why the Sun's corona remains far hotter than its visible surface. The findings, published in the Astrophysical Journal Letters, were led by Professor R. Ramesh of the Indian Institute of Astrophysics (IIA). The study sheds new light on the processes that heat the Sun's outermost atmosphere and replenish energy lost during powerful solar eruptions. The temperature structure of the Sun has puzzled astrophysicists for decades. While temperatures in the Sun's core reach nearly 15 million degrees Celsius, the visible surface, known as the photosphere, is significantly cooler at around 5,500 degrees Celsius. Surprisingly, the corona, located much farther from the core, can reach temperatures of around 2 million degrees Celsius and occasionally soar to as high as 40 million degrees Celsius. This apparent increase in temperature away from the heat source challenges conventional expectations and has remained one of the most enduring unsolved questions in solar science. The corona is also the birth place of extreme solar weather events, including solar flares and coronal mass ejections (CMEs). During these eruptions, the Sun ejects enormous amounts of energy and charged particles into space. Such events can lead to spectacular auroras on Earth but can also disrupt power grids, communication networks, navigation systems and satellites through geomagnetic storms. According to Prof.

'China's cheap exports taking economy to brink of crisis'

NEW DELHI

China's relentless policy of driving exports and widening its trade surplus, by any means, has hit the manufacturing sector of advanced economies such as the United States and those in Europe, as well as developing countries in Africa, Asia, and Latin America. China has completely ignored the global consensus that its overcapacity is harming other countries. However, now this problem is approaching a breaking point. And if that breaking point comes, the consequence could be a global economic crisis at a time when governments are particularly ill-equipped to manage the fallout, the article in Foreign Policy magazine laments. Over the past two decades, China has established the largest trade surplus in recorded history. In 2025, this reached nearly $1.2 trillion, growing at three times the rate of global goods trade. This is politically and structurally unsustainable—creating an increasing and underappreciated risk to the entire global economy, according to the article by Michael B. G. Froman.

India's foreign exchange reserves surged by $14.136 billion in the week ended August 7, crossing the $707 billion mark, as foreign currency assets and gold holdings recorded strong gains, according to Reserve Bank of India data released on Friday. Total reserves rose to $707.308 billion during the reporting week, compared with the previous week, when reserves had increased by

India's forex reserves hit record $707 billion:

- Forex reserves rise $14.136 billion in one week,
- Total reserves cross $707 billion mark,
- Foreign currency assets climb to $574.625 billion,
- Gold reserves rise to $108.738 billion,
- Reserves up $15.894 billion since March 2026.

$2.156 billion to $693.172 billion. In rupee terms, the reserves expanded by Rs 1.19 lakh crore to Rs 67.32 lakh crore.

Foreign currency assets, the largest component of the reserves, increased by $9.946 billion to $574.625 billion. Gold reserves also climbed significantly by $3.995 billion to $108.738 billion. The value of India's Special Drawing Rights with the International Monetary Fund rose by $79 million to $18.745 billion. The country's reserve position with the IMF also increased by $116 million to $4.894 billion. The latest data showed that India's reserves have risen by $15.894 billion since the end of March 2026 and by $13.384 billion on an annual basis. The increase strengthens the country's external sector position and provides a larger cushion against global financial and commodity market volatility.

Forex reserves, managed by the RBI, include foreign currency assets, gold, SDRs and the reserve tranche position with the IMF. They are closely monitored as an indicator of a country's capacity to meet external obligations and support currency stability amid heightened global uncertainty. The sharp rise in reserves offers additional resilience for the rupee while strengthening India's ability to manage potential external shocks.

Professional services can drive skilled jobs

NEW DELHI

As India approaches its demographic peak, professional services are emerging as an avenue for high-skilled employment, entrepreneurship and innovation, according to a NITI Aayog report released on Friday.

The report, the third under NITI Aayog's 'Services Thematic Series', examines India's regulatory framework for professional services and benchmarks it against select foreign jurisdictions. It was launched by NITI Aayog Vice Chairman Ashok Kumar Lahiri in the presence of CEO Nidhi Chhibber and MOSPI Secretary Dr Saurabh Garg. According to an official statement, the assessment draws on extensive consultations with stakeholders and identifies regulatory challenges that could limit the sector's growth. It also outlines a pathway for policy dialogue and reforms aimed at strengthening professional services ecosystem. Professional services account for nearly a quarter of India's total services exports, making the segment a critical contributor to the country's external sector. The report noted that these high-value, knowledge-intensive activities support downstream services, generate employment and remittance inflows, and form an important part of the services value chain. The report said a well-designed regulatory ecosystem could further boost service exports, facilitate cross-border mobility of professionals and improve the ease of doing business. It stressed that understanding regulatory conditions is essential for unlocking the sector's potential as India's working-age population expands. The report proposes a four-pronged strategy covering emerging trends, stronger integration within the services value chain, adoption of best practices and continuous professional development. Together, these measures seek to improve efficiency, productivity and global competitiveness while enabling India's professional workforce to capture new opportunities. Ashok Kumar Lahiri: "Professional services are critical to India's services economy and future high-skilled employment." Highlight of the meeting: The report's four-pronged strategy focuses on emerging trends, strengthening professional services across the value chain, adopting global best practices and promoting continuous professional development. These measures are aimed at improving sectoral efficiency, productivity and competitiveness while expanding India's ability to deliver high-value services globally.

A stronger regulatory ecosystem could help India expand professional services, create skilled jobs, boost exports and improve global mobility for professionals.

India's shift to higher-value crops boosts demand for organised price discovery

NEW DELHI

India's shift toward higher value crops such as spices and oilseeds is creating stronger demand for organised price discovery and risk management, a report said on Friday. The report from Multi Commodity Exchange of India Limited (MCX) said spices recorded the strongest production growth among the crop categories, rising from 6.99 million metric tonnes in 2015 16 to 12.99 MMT in 2024 25, up 85.9 per cent. Production is projected to touch 18.12 MMT by 2029-30, growing at a forecast CAGR of

6.87 per cent. High value spices showed broad-based gains as Ajwain production more than tripled between 2015 16 and 2024 25, while ginger, cumin and garlic registered CAGRs of 9.12 per cent, 8.75 per cent and 8.23 per cent respectively. Oilseeds also expanded strongly, from 25.25 MMT in 2015 16 to 42.99 MMT in 2024 25, showing cumulative growth of 70.2 per cent. The segment grew at a CAGR of 5.46 per cent, the second highest growth rate among the eight segments analysed. Oilseed production is projected to touch around 56.7

MMT by 2029-30, the report said. Among major oilseeds, rapeseed and mustard led the growth with production rising 86.4 per cent to 12.67 MMT. Soybean and groundnut production rose 78.2 per cent and 77.4 per cent, respectively. Groundnut, rapeseed and mustard, and soybean accounted for 95 per cent of the oil-seed sector's Rs 2,135.3 billion economic output in 2023-24. The report noted that India's agricultural growth is increasingly being driven by high-value commodities, such as spices and oilseeds, creating opportunities for market-based risk management, value addition and organised trading. The changing crop mix is increasing the importance of efficient market mechanisms as production, consumption and trade expand, the report said, adding that a well-functioning agricultural derivatives market is an essential component of agricultural market infrastructure.

Bank deposits hit record high as RBI's FCNR scheme spurs inflows

Deposits in India's banking system have accelerated sharply over the past three fortnights and rose to a record high, helped largely by the conversion of foreign-currency inflows mobilised under the Reserve Bank of India's (RBI) special deposit schemes, according to a report. According to a report by Reuters, banking system deposits increased by a cumulative Rs 11 lakh crore over the three fortnights ended July 31. This follows a net decline of Rs 3.87 lakh crore in deposits between April 1 and June 15. The turnaround comes after the RBI in June unveiled concessional swap windows for foreign currency non-resident (FCNR) deposits and encouraged banks and state-owned entities to tap cheaper overseas funding sources. The measures have attracted inflows of nearly $41 billion by the end of July, RBI data showed. The conversion of dollars into rupees has gained pace, which is the major reason for the recent boost in deposits, the report said, citing a trader at a state-run bank. As a result, total deposits in the banking system rose to a record Rs 269.4 lakh crore as of July 31, an increase of Rs 7.1 lakh crore in the first four months of the current financial year.

Natco Pharma Q1 net profit slumps 57 pc on weak Lenalidomide sales

MUMBAI

Natco Pharma Limited on Friday reported a 57 per cent year-on-year (YoY) decline in consolidated net profit for the first quarter of the current financial year (Q1 FY27) as lower sales of its generic cancer drug lenalidomide weighed on revenue and operating performance. The consolidated net profit net profit falling to Rs 206.5 crore from Rs 480.3 crore in the corresponding period last financial year (Q1 FY26), according to its stock exchange filing. The weak performance was primarily driven by lower sales of lenalidomide, the company's generic version of a cancer treatment drug, which significantly impacted its international business during the quarter. Revenue from operations dropped 44.7 per cent to Rs 735.2 crore in the April-June quarter from Rs 1,328.9 crore a year earlier. The company said the decline was largely attributable to lower revenues from lenalidomide, although the impact was partly offset by growth in its core business segments. Operating performance also came under pressure during the quarter. EBITDA declined 67.4 per cent year-on-year to Rs 186 crore from Rs 571 crore, while EBITDA margin contracted sharply to 25.3 per cent from 43 per cent in the year-ago period. Despite the revenue slowdown, the company managed to reduce its overall expenses. Total expenses stood at Rs 608.8 crore during the quarter, compared with Rs 818.7 crore in the corresponding period of the previous fiscal year. Natco's domestic formulations business recorded healthy growth. Revenue from the segment rose to Rs 136.4 crore in the first quarter from Rs 107 crore a year earlier, as per its regulatory filing. However, the company's international formulations business witnessed a steep decline. Revenue from the segment fell to Rs 477.1 crore from Rs 1,120.9 crore in the year-ago quarter. The active pharmaceutical ingredients (API) business delivered a positive performance, with revenue increasing to Rs 66.7 crore from Rs 52.6 crore in the corresponding quarter last financial year. Alongside the earnings announcement, Natco Pharma's board approved an interim dividend of Rs 1.50 per equity share.

Vidyaniketan dismantles Ryan for stunning D2 win

In a thrilling bowling masterclass, Vidyani- ketan Public School from Ullal clinched a dominant 9-wicket victory over Ryan International School during the KM Ramprasad Shield Under-16 Division II cricket tournament. The 50-over fixture, organized by the Karnataka State Cricket Association (KSCA), took place at the NAL National Aerospace Laboratories Stadium.

Ryan International School initially looked comfortable after winning the toss and getting off to a steady start, putting up 40 runs in 10 overs without losing a single wicket. However, the game turned completely on its head following a devastating bowling spell from the Vidyani- ketan bowlers.

Bowlers Divij Sai Prasad and Sumukh dismantled the opposition batting lineup with a lethal combination of pace and spin. Divij led the charge by conceding just 17 runs across 6 overs while picking up 5 crucial wickets. Teammate Sumukh matched the brilliance from the other end, claiming 5 wickets while giving away only 12 runs. Unable to handle the sudden pressure, Ryan International collapsed entirely from 40 for no loss to be bowled out for a meager total of 68 runs.

Chasing a modest target of 69 runs, Vidyani- ketan Public School faced little trouble reaching the finish line. Losing just one wicket along the way, they comfortably chased down the target to seal a comprehensive 9-wicket triumph and advance their campaign in style.

Chillar's calculated gamble sparks Dilli's win

NEW DELHI

Purani Dilli 6 batter Ashwini Chillar shared that his squad purposely aimed to take the match deep to secure a dramatic last-over win against the North Delhi Strikers in the Delhi Premier League (DPL) 2026.

The team bounced back from a shaky start to claim a brilliant four-wicket victory. Speaking after the match, Chillar talked about how careful planning helped them get the win.

"Winning a match like this brings immense joy," Chillar said. "We had a clear plan - if we wanted to win, we needed to take the game deep and keep wickets in hand till the end so everyone coming down could contribute 10 to 15 runs."

Earlier, North Delhi Strikers scored a competitive total of 186/6 in their 20 overs. Captain Sarthak Ranjan and Yash Bhatia both hit brilliant 59s, while Yash Dabas added a quick 36 runs.

In reply, Purani Dilli 6 struggled early on and fell to 53/4. However, a massive 105-run partnership for the fifth wicket between Lalit Yadav, who scored 64 off 41 balls, and Ashwini Chillar, who made 45 off 36, completely changed the game.

Even though Chillar got out in the final over with seven runs still needed, Pankaj Jaswal became the hero by hitting back-to-back sixes on his first two balls to seal the win. Chillar admitted he was a bit sad not to finish the game himself or reach his fifty, but praised the squad's strong team spirit.

Neymar sparked controversy by urging negative Santos fans to stay home after a hard-fought 2-1 Copa Sudamericana win

Brazilian football icon Neymar has sparked a major debate after sending a blunt message to his own club supporters. Following a hard-fought 2-1 victory over Ecuador's Macara in the Copa Sudamericana, the seasoned forward did not hold back his frustration. He publicly urged negative fans to watch games from their living rooms rather than bringing bad energy to the stadium. The dramatic match at Vila Belmiro got off to a nightmare start for the home side. Macara stunned the crowd by taking an early lead just four minutes into the game thanks to a sharp goal by Franco Posse. Hearing groans and boos from the stands so early in the contest deeply upset Neymar, who felt the team needed encouragement more than ever during a tough moment.

Neymar to critics: Stay home if negative

Speaking to reporters after the final whistle, the 34 year-old star explained his touchline reaction. He noted that while he understands the fanbase has endured painful years recently, showing up with a hostile attitude hurts the squad. He pointed out that complaining while the team is down only makes the job harder on the pitch. Instead, he asked the crowd to back the players until the final whistle blows.

Despite the tension in the stands, Neymar proved his immense value on the field once again. He shook off the hostile noise and put on a masterclass. Right before halftime, he slipped a clever pass to Gabriel Barbosa, who slotted home the crucial equalizer. Later, in the seventy-fifth minute, Neymar delivered a pinpoint corner kick that Willian Arao powered home with a header to seal the comeback win. This clutch performance extends an incredible run of form for the veteran player. Over his last 24 appearances for Santos, he has racked up thirteen goals and eight assists, proving he remains a vital engine for the team.

Looking ahead, Santos will carry a slim 2-1 aggregate lead when they travel to Ambato next week for the decisive second leg. A simple draw will be enough to secure their spot in the tournament quarter-finals. However, the bigger question hanging over the club is whether the supporters and their star player can fully mend their relationship before the next big kickoff.

Kumara cannot be easily replaced, says De Silva

GALLE

Sri Lanka Test captain Dhananjaya de Silva has strongly backed the decision to recall wicketkeeper-batter Niroshan Dickwella for the upcoming 1st Test match against India at the Galle International Cricket Stadium.

Dickwella's return has sparked heavy debate across the country. Many cricket critics wondered why local players in great form, such as Sadeera Samarawickrama and the uncapped Anjala Bandara, were left out after Kusal Mendis suffered an injury. However, de Silva made it clear that expert wicketkeeping skills are needed most on the tricky Galle pitch.

"The only thing I have to tell Niroshan Dickwella is to keep well. That's why he's in the team," de Silva explained during the pre-match press conference. He noted that Dickwella missed out in recent years because Kusal Mendis performed well at number 7. Yet, with conditions in Galle proving difficult, the management team and selectors unanimously agreed that the best gloves must take priority.

The skipper also spoke about fast bowler Lahiru Kumara, whose career has often been slowed down by injuries, including a recent hamstring issue in the West Indies in June. De Silva stressed that the team lacks a deep talent pool for fast bowling, making Kumara essential to the squad.

"Right now in Sri Lanka, no bowler can replace Lahiru Kumara," the captain said. He hopes the speedster will bounce back and deliver a strong performance in the upcoming series against India.

A final home race, a stunning helmet

Formula 1 star Max Verstappen has pulled back the curtain on a truly unique helmet design ahead of his final home appearance at the upcoming Dutch Grand Prix.

Moving away from his standard look for the 2026 season, the 4 time world champion will wear a striking white and blue helmet inspired by classic Dutch Delftware pottery. The craftsmanship features delicate floral patterns and detailed blue artwork wrapping around the bottom edges. Standard sponsor logos from Red Bull and Oracle remain visible on the front, while his well-known golden lion emblem sits proudly on top, blending local culture with his racing identity.

This upcoming race weekend at the coastal circuit of Zandvoort, scheduled for August 21 to 23, holds major emotional weight for both the driver and his supporters. Organizers have confirmed that this will be the final running of the Dutch Grand Prix. Following a short 1 year contract extension covering the 2026 calendar, promoters decided not to renew the deal further, meaning F1 will say goodbye to Zandvoort starting in 2027.

Verstappen shared the fresh design with his followers across social media platforms, expressing his gratitude to the local crowds. Alongside pictures of the helmet, he wrote a heartfelt message thanking the fans who have supported him over the years. The post quickly went viral, pulling in hundreds of thousands of likes within hours. Fans flooded the comment sections with praise, calling the helmet a true piece of art and sharing sadness over the race leaving the calendar. The official Dutch Grand Prix account also joined the conversation, thanking the champion for the unforgettable memories shared on home soil.

As the race weekend approaches, Verstappen finds himself in a fascinating battle on the track. He currently sits sixth in the driver standings with 109 points, trailing the championship leader by a significant margin. Meanwhile, Red Bull holds fourth place in the constructors' championship with 177 points. Even with the championship fight proving difficult this season, the home hero remains entirely focused on putting on a memorable show for the massive orange army cheering him on for one final time.

NEW DELHI

Indian shooter Raiza Dhillon is getting ready for her very first Asian Games appearance. The 22-year-old athlete from Chandigarh will compete in the senior women's skeet event, carrying on a long family tradition.

Growing up in Shamgarh, Haryana, guns were always a part of daily life due to her family's hunting background. When Raiza was just 12 years old, her father encouraged her to try the sport formally to see if she had a natural knack for it. She started with a light 10-meter air rifle. Later, at age 16, she switched to the heavier shotgun once she was old enough.

Her father was thrilled from the beginning, while her mother was cautious at first about her spending so much time outdoors. However, seeing Raiza's deep happiness and success changed her mind completely.

Shooting has also helped Raiza grow personally. Once a shy child, she says handling a shotgun gave her a strong sense of empowerment, completely boosting her confidence and life outlook. She has already faced major challenges, including earning an Olympic quota in 2024 at age 20 and handling the immense pressure of competing in Paris.

Raiza credits her success to her strong support system. Her coaches help fix technical flaws, while her parents provide emotional balance. She also praised the National Rifle Association of India (NRAI) for organizing top-tier training camps with psychologists and physios.

As she heads to her maiden Asian Games, Raiza is excited and focused. Her main goal is a podium finish, but she also wants to enjoy every moment, knowing that happiness brings out her best performance on the range.
