Woman's entry into Karnataka Cabinet awaits Cong top brass nod!

CM PROPOSES INDUCTING WOMAN INTO ALL-MALE CABINET

The move responds to mounting pressure before the legislature's Winter Session.

BENGALURU

Karnataka Chief Minister DK Shivakumar on Sunday said he had placed a proposal for inducting a woman member into the state Cabinet before the Congress leadership in Delhi and would discuss the matter when summoned by the party high command.

He said he would travel to Delhi on Monday to attend the release of Congress Parliamentary Party chairperson Sonia Gandhi's autobiography and would return to Bengaluru the same night. "I don't know whether it will be possible to discuss tomorrow, but I have already placed the proposal before the leadership in Delhi. They said they would call me. There is a need, I will do it. I will discuss it at the appropriate time," he said in response to a query about whether he would discuss the issue with the high command during tomorrow's visit.

Last week, Shivakumar said a woman minister would be inducted into the state Cabinet before the next session of the state legislature.

When asked about arrangements at the Suvarna Vidhana Soudha in Belagavi ahead of the forthcoming legislature session and reported management problems, the CM said Speaker GS Patil would look into the matter. "The Speaker will take care of it. I will ask the DC (Deputy Commissioner) to look into -- what the problems are," he said.

Raised Mekedatu issue with Centre, PM Modi

Regarding the Mekedatu project and opposition to Karnataka's position from Tamil Nadu, including from that state's Congress president B Manickam Tagore, the CM said he had already raised the Mekedatu issue with the Centre and Prime Minister Narendra Modi.

"We have to respect the law of this country. Whatever the court says, we have to implement it. Politically, they (Tamil Nadu) may oppose it, and they are free to express their views. Tamil Nadu has a big legal team and let them understand the legal position. We are not going to stop anyone from voicing their opposition, but we have to do our job."

Believes in maintaining dignity of constitutional positions

Asked about his interactions with the Prime Minister and whether the bonding had become a source of discomfort within the state BJP, Shivakumar said he believed in maintaining the dignity of constitutional positions and working with the Centre on development. "I have to give the PM respect for his position, just as he has to respect the CM. I had said earlier too that we could fight politically during elections but should work together on development. We will continue to do that," he said.

Hiriyur bypoll

On the pending announcement of Hiriyur assembly bypoll, he said the wait was on for the Election Commission's announcement, while continuing its preparations. He said he would personally participate in the 'Praja Seva' programme at Hiriyur on November 21 and had directed officials to make the necessary arrangements. "I was expecting the elections to be announced, but it has not happened yet. We have got time. I will go and listen to people's grievances."

Winter session & women representation vacuum

The Winter Session of the Karnataka Legislature will be held from December 2 to December 11 at the Suvarna Vidhana Soudha in Belagavi. Pressure is mounting on the CM to fill one of the two vacant berths with a woman minister. Two months after assuming charge as the CM, Shivakumar expanded his Cabinet on August 3, by inducting 19 ministers, bringing the total strength to 33 against the Cabinet size of 34. However, two berths are currently vacant in the Cabinet following the resignation of B Nagendra, who was facing corruption charges.

CM's statement in a nutshell

Cabinet reshuffle: CM DK Shivakumar says proposal to induct a woman minister has been placed before the Congress leadership.

Delhi visit: Shivakumar will visit Delhi on Monday to attend the release of Sonia Gandhi's autobiography.

High command meeting: He will discuss the proposal when summoned by the party leadership.

Winter session: Karnataka Legislature's Winter Session will be held from December 2 to 11 at Suvarna Vidhana Soudha, Belagavi.

CM moots resident data collection to ensure safety

BENGALURU

Chief Minister DK Shivakumar on Sunday said maintaining law and order in Bengaluru is a top priority, noting that the Home Department has been directed to set up a dedicated wing to crack down on crime, rowdyism, and drugs. He framed the proposed door-to-door household data collection as a measure for police to maintain accurate residency records and improve public safety. "To ensure the safety of residents, there is a pressing need to collect household-level data across the city. It has also come to our notice that Bengaluru's electoral roll has shrunk from 51 lakh to 45 lakh voters. Given this, instructions will be issued to ensure the police department maintains accurate records of who resides where in the city," he said while addressing a public event here.

No one can drive us out of Ramanagara: HDK

RAMANAGARA

Union Minister HD Kumaraswamy on Sunday lashed out at the Congress, saying while some people have vowed to oust the JD(S) and its family from the Ramanagara district, such a feat is beyond anyone's capability.

Speaking in Hunsanahalli village, he strongly criticised the state's Congress government over the recent incident in Doddakurubarahalli, where Nikhil Kumaraswamy was denied entry to a temple, as well as its style of governance.

He described the denial of Nikhil's entry to the Doddakurubarahalli temple as "petty politics."

He recalled a similar incident in Hosuru village in 2004, before he became an MLA, when a temple was locked to prevent him from entering.

At the time, his party workers broke the lock. This time, however, Nikhil has urged his supporters to remain calm and avoid a confrontation. "Congress leaders should understand this," he said.

Assurance to party workers

"From now on, I will personally spend two days each month touring all four assembly constituencies in Ramanagara district with Nikhil. I have taken note of the injustices being meted out by the government. I intend to protect our youth and party workers and strengthen their morale," he promised.

He further alleged, "Some people talk about a 'monument of evidence' (sakshigudde) in the taluk. But has Ramanagara seen any real change over the past three-and-a-half years? This government's record amounts to nothing more than a 'monument' of empty announcements."

He also alleged that stone had been extracted in Kanakapura, leaving villages deserted, before being shipped abroad.

> From now on, I will personally spend two days each month touring all four assembly constituencies in Ramanagara district with Nikhil.
>
> - HD Kumaraswamy, Union Minister

Context of the statement

Temple incident: Nikhil Kumaraswamy was allegedly denied entry into the newly constructed Maramma temple at Doddakurubarahalli village in Harohalli taluk on Friday evening.

Reason: Local Congress workers reportedly locked the temple gates, claiming they had contributed more funds towards its construction.

Kumaraswamy's reaction: Union Minister HD Kumaraswamy termed the incident "high-handed behaviour" and accused the Congress government of encouraging intimidation of JD(S) workers.

Political stronghold: He said Doddakurubarahalli had traditionally supported his family and asserted that Ramanagara voters would respond to Congress democratically.

Protests and complaint: JD(S) workers staged protests following the incident and lodged a complaint against the Congress workers at Harohalli police station.

India secured preferential US market access: Goyal

NEW DELHI

Commerce and Industry Minister Piyush Goyal on Sunday said India has secured an agreement with the United States to receive preferential market access for its goods, with lower import duties than competing countries.

Goyal said the understanding was reached between Prime Minister Narendra Modi and US President Donald Trump when the two countries announced a broad framework for their bilateral trade agreement (BTA). Negotiations are currently underway to finalise the first phase of the deal.

"This was already agreed between the leaders - President (Donald) Trump and Prime Minister Narendra Modi when they announced that we have both come to a broad framework agreement a few months ago and it has been acknowledged that India will get preferential trade access in the US with lower duties than our competitor countries," he told reporters in Cairo.

The minister is on a two-day visit to Egypt to discuss ways to strengthen trade and investment ties between the two countries.

Stop foreign tours, visit villages: Shah slams Rahul for 'defaming' India

NEW DELHI

Union Home Minister Amit Shah on Sunday accused Congress leader Rahul Gandhi of maligning India and Prime Minister Narendra Modi before an international audience, telling the Leader of Opposition in Lok Sabha to stop travelling abroad and visit villages if he wanted his party to return to power.

His comments came a day after Gandhi told the Bharat Summit in Hyderabad that defeating PM Modi was a "done deal". Gandhi said he was confident the Opposition would remove Modi from power and claimed there was growing fear within the ruling establishment.

"Defaming India at international platforms will not help him come to power," Shah said after laying the foundation stone for the National Heavy Engineering Cooperative in Pune.

"If he aspires to return to power, he should stop travelling abroad and start visiting villages across India. Then, perhaps, he may have a chance."

CRPF withdraws anti-Naxal battalion from Chhattisgarh

RAIPUR

The Central Armed Police Force (CAPF) has withdrawn a battalion comprising more than 1,000 personnel from the anti-Maoist operations theatre in Chhattisgarh and moved it to Manipur to strengthen security deployment amid continuing ethnic violence in the state.

The move marks the first such de-induction of any Central Armed Police Force (CAPF) unit from the anti-Naxal zone since the Centre declared the end of armed Maoism in the country in March.

The battalion was stationed in Sukma district, part of the south Bastar region that was once a major Maoist stronghold. It had been involved in Left Wing Extremism (LWE) operations for several years and was subsequently engaged in de-mining and defusing improvised explosive devices (IEDs) after March, as per reports.

For the past few years, it had been undertaking LWE operations, followed by de-mining and defusing IEDs post-March.

"The CRPF headquarters has ordered the de-induction of a general duty battalion from Chhattisgarh and directed it to move to Manipur, where ethnic violence has been simmering for more than three years now.

"This is the first full withdrawal of any paramilitary unit from the anti-Naxal operations theatre following the declaration that armed Maoism in the country ended in March," a senior security officer based in Delhi said.

Ashoka accuses Cong of 'double standards' on Mekedatu project

BENGALURU

Senior BJP leader R Ashoka on Sunday accused the Congress of adopting "double standards" on the Mekedatu project over the Cauvery River, saying while the party championed Karnataka's water rights in the state, its leaders in Tamil Nadu were opposing the project. The LoP in the Legislative Assembly said the Congress had used the sentiments of Kannadigas for political gains through its Mekedatu padayatra under the slogan 'Our water, our right', but had now remained silent in the face of opposition from its own leaders in TN. "This silence itself is proof of the Congress's real concern for Karnataka," he alleged in an X post. He said that TN Congress Committee president B Manickam Tagore had described the Mekedatu project as illegal and urged Chief Minister Vijay to take legal steps to prevent its implementation. TN Congress MP Jothimani had also opposed the project, he said.

SAFETY OVERSIGHT CHECK

India's aviation rulebook set to get a close-up review

NEW DELHI

The US Federal Aviation Administration will review India's aviation safety oversight framework from November 16-20, with the five-day assessment focusing on aircraft operations, airworthiness and personnel licensing

The audit assumes significance as India seeks to retain its top-tier safety rating under the FAA's International Aviation Safety Assessment programme, even as its rapidly expanding aviation industry places greater demands on regulatory oversight.

Under the IASA framework, the FAA examines whether a country's aviation regulator has the institutional capacity to enforce international safety norms for airlines operating to the US or partnering with American carriers through codeshare agreements. The evaluation measures compliance with safety standards prescribed by the International Civil Aviation Organization, with the upcoming review assessing the Directorate General of Civil Aviation's regulatory effectiveness and its ability to maintain those standards.

India currently holds Category 1 status, the highest rating under the FAA assessment framework. Air India is presently the only Indian airline operating direct flights to US cities.

India's last IASA review began with an FAA inspection of the DGCA in October 2021, followed by consultations in April 2022 and further assessments in July and September. The findings were made public in April 2023, when the US regulator confirmed that India had retained its Category 1 classification.

The latest assessment assumes significance amid heightened attention on aviation safety following a series of aircraft-related incidents. Last year, an Air India Boeing 787-8 aircraft bound for London Gatwick crashed shortly after taking off from Ahmedabad, killing 260 people. Several helicopter accidents and other aviation-related incidents have also been reported this year.

India's Category 1 status was restored in 2015 after the FAA downgraded the country to Category 2 in January 2014 over concerns about the DGCA's safety oversight capabilities. The concerns followed an ICAO audit in December 2012, which identified two Significant Safety Concerns in the areas of aircraft operations and airworthiness. Despite ICAO confirming that the deficiencies had been addressed in August 2013, the FAA carried out a separate evaluation and subsequently placed India in Category 2. India regained the highest safety classification in 2015 after the DGCA implemented the corrective measures required by the US regulator.

FAA audit of India's aviation safety standards – Key points

Audit dates: November 16–20, 2026 (five-day assessment).

Conducting agency: US Federal Aviation Administration (FAA).

Regulator under review: Directorate General of Civil Aviation (DGCA).

Key areas of assessment: Aircraft operations. Airworthiness of aircraft. Personnel licensing and qualifications.

Objective: Assess India's compliance with international aviation safety standards prescribed by the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO).

Previous audit: FAA's last assessment was conducted in October 2021. India retained Category 1 status in April 2023.

Current status: India holds Category 1 status, the highest rating under the FAA's International Aviation Safety Assessment (IASA) programme.

Historical background: India was downgraded to Category 2 in January 2014 over deficiencies in aviation safety oversight but regained Category 1 in 2015.

Significance: ICategory 1 status allows Indian airlines to operate and expand flights to the US and enter codeshare arrangements with American carriers.

Current context: The audit comes amid heightened scrutiny following the Ahmedabad Air India crash in June 2025, which killed 260 people.

Siddaramaiah calls for equality through sorghum story

Comparing the work to Kanakadasa's Ramadhanya Charite, Siddaramaiah praised Badawadagi for honouring jola, the vital staple of working-class families

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

Former Karnataka Chief Minister Siddaramaiah has praised author Sangamesha Badawadagi for highlighting social and regional inequalities through his book Jolarajana Kathe (The Story of the Sorghum King). He said literature plays an important role in creating an equal society.

Speaking at the book release in Bengaluru, Siddaramaiah compared the work with poet Kanakadasa's Ramadhanya Charite. While Kanakadasa highlighted the importance of ragi, Badawadagi has brought attention to jola (sorghum), a staple food of poor and working-class families.

Sharing his childhood memories, Siddaramaiah recalled that ragi and jola were everyday foods in poor households, while rice was mainly prepared during festivals and special occasions. He said these experiences influenced his decision to introduce the Anna Bhagya scheme during his tenure as Chief Minister to improve food security among poor families.

He also highlighted the historical backwardness of the Kalyana Karnataka region and stressed the importance of Article 371(J) in providing better opportunities in education, employment and development. He said the constitutional provision had helped young people from the region pursue careers in medicine, engineering and teaching.

Casteism and superstitions continue to exist even among educated people, he said

Siddaramaiah also expressed concern over recurring droughts and their impact on farmers and rural families. He urged governments to provide timely assistance to people facing water shortages and agricultural losses.

Speaking about social inequality, he recalled the teachings of Basavanna, Dr B.R. Ambedkar and Mahatma Gandhi, who advocated equality and a society free from caste discrimination. He said casteism and superstitions continued to exist even among educated people and called for scientific thinking and rational attitudes.

Congratulating Badawadagi, Siddaramaiah said the book highlighted the food culture, lives and struggles of people in Kalyana Karnataka. He called for a prosperous Karnataka where social and regional inequalities are removed and everyone enjoys equal opportunities.

High Court calls for better police mental health support

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

The High Court of Karnataka in Bengaluru.

The Karnataka High Court has called on police and security departments to strengthen mental health support for their personnel, stressing that those who protect society also face personal problems, family difficulties and emotional stress.

The observation came while quashing criminal proceedings against a 37-year-old woman Sub-Inspector of the Central Industrial Security Force (CISF), who attempted suicide while on duty in Mangaluru in 2022.

Justice Suraj Govindaraj, in an order dated November 12, said personnel in uniform should not be expected to remain unaffected by personal struggles. He urged authorities to review existing policies, provide counselling and treatment without stigma, and ensure regular mental health assessments, particularly for personnel handling firearms.

WHAT THE COURT ASKED FOR

- Review existing policies
- Counselling and treatment without stigma
- Regular mental health assessments, particularly for personnel handling firearms

Attempt in 2022

The officer had attempted suicide using her service pistol on October 12, 2022, after facing severe emotional distress over her inability to conceive despite medical treatment. She suffered serious injuries and underwent major surgery.

A case was registered against her under Section 309 of the Indian Penal Code (IPC). The Mangaluru court rejected her discharge application in December 2024, following which she approached the High Court.

Allowing her petition, the High Court held that Section 115 of the Mental Healthcare Act, 2017, presumes that a person attempting suicide is under severe stress unless proved otherwise. Such a person should receive care, treatment and rehabilitation rather than criminal punishment under the IPC, unless the presumption is rebutted.

The court also observed that the investigating officer and trial court should have considered this legal protection. It directed its Registrar to forward the order to the Directors General of the CISF and Karnataka Police.

The court emphasised the need for stronger welfare measures and responsible firearm management across security organisations.

Bommai described Gandhi's remarks as misleading and unconstitutional. He referred to the Emergency imposed in 1975 and questioned the Congress party's record on democracy and constitutional values.

Kumaraswamy responds to Ashoka on Hiriyur bypoll

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

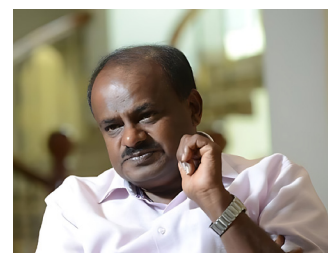

Political activity has intensified in Karnataka ahead of the proposed by-election to the Hiriyur Assembly constituency following the death of sitting Congress MLA D. Sudhakar on May 10, 2026. Differences have emerged between BJP and JD(S) over which party should contest the seat as the NDA candidate.

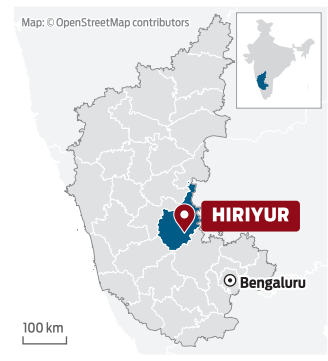

Union Minister and JD(S) leader H.D. Kumaraswamy has called for discussions between the alliance partners before deciding on the candidate.

Kumaraswamy expressed displeasure over remarks by BJP Leader of Opposition R. Ashoka, who said the Hiriyur ticket should go to the BJP. He said the decision should not be based on which party gets the opportunity but on public opinion and the alliance's chances of winning.

He added that he had no personal objection to either the BJP or JD(S) fielding a candidate. Both parties should assess the situation and take a decision through mutual discussions, he said.

Earlier, Ashoka had stated that the BJP would discuss the matter with Kumaraswamy and approach the party's central leadership to secure the ticket for its candidate. Meanwhile, the JD(S) has also expressed interest in contesting the constituency, citing its organisational strength in the region. Kumaraswamy has indicated that he would place the party's demand before the BJP leadership. On the Congress side, Chief Minister D.K. Shivakumar is overseeing preparations to retain the constituency. The possibility of fielding Suhas Sudhakar, son of the late MLA, has also been discussed. With both alliance partners interested in contesting the seat, the selection of a consensus NDA candidate remains a key issue ahead of the by-election.

Karnataka plans ban on private tuition for Classes 1–9

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

The Karnataka government is considering a proposal to prohibit private tuition centres from coaching students in Classes 1 to 9, in a move aimed at curbing unregulated educational activities across the state.

The Department of School Education has proposed the restriction to prevent private tuition centres from functioning like unauthorised schools.

The proposal seeks to regulate coaching institutions operating without proper government approval.

The associations representing private educational institutions have welcomed the move and urged the government to take stricter action against unauthorised tuition centres.

They have called for the strict implementation of Rules 4 and 6 of the Education Act. They have also demanded that institutions providing coaching to Pre-University Course (PUC) students obtain official government permission.

The associations have further sought reforms in the tuition system for Secondary School Leaving Certificate (SSLC) and PUC students to ensure better regulation.

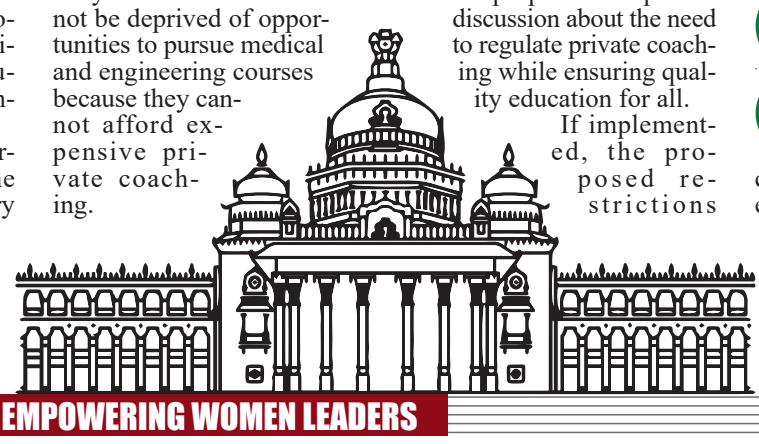

Another major demand is to include National Eligibility-cum-Entrance Test (NEET) and Joint Entrance Examination (JEE) preparation in the regular school and college curriculum.

The associations argued that students from economically weaker families should not be deprived of opportunities to pursue medical and engineering courses because they cannot afford expensive private coaching.

They stressed that government college students should receive equal opportunities to compete with students from financially stronger backgrounds.

The Education Department's proposal has sparked discussion about the need to regulate private coaching while ensuring quality education for all.

If implemented, the proposed restrictions could bring significant changes to Karnataka's private tuition sector. However, ensuring affordable coaching and equal opportunities for students will remain an important challenge for the government.

What the associations seek

- Strict implementation of Rules 4 and 6 of the Education Act
- Government permission for PUC coaching
- NEET and JEE preparation in the regular curriculum

Shivamogga teacher accused of insulting underprivileged students

A Shivamogga government Urdu teacher allegedly humiliated disadvantaged students with derogatory remarks about their families' occupations and backgrounds.

The Government Urdu-English Upgraded Higher Primary School at Tipu Nagar in Shivamogga.

CH NEWS, SHIVAMOGGA

Serious allegations have emerged against a teacher at a government Urdu school in Shivamogga, accusing her of humiliating underprivileged students by making derogatory remarks about their families' occupations and economic backgrounds.

Parents have lodged a complaint with the Block Education Officer (BEO), demanding the immediate transfer of Rafia Ghazali, a teacher at the Government Urdu School on 6th Cross, Tipu Nagar, and disciplinary action against her.

According to the complaint, the teacher allegedly made insulting remarks about students from economically weaker families instead of encouraging and supporting them in their education.

What she allegedly said

Parents alleged that she told students that children of poor auto-rickshaw drivers would grow up to become auto-rickshaw drivers themselves, while children of scrap dealers would continue in the same occupation. She also allegedly made disparaging comments about the future of girls, saying they would marry men engaged in tile-laying work.

Parents demand action over teacher's remarks

Outraged parents sought a government school teacher's immediate transfer after she allegedly mocked poor students' family livelihoods, claiming they would inherit menial jobs. The remarks humiliated children, making them reluctant to attend school, prompting calls for Department of School Education intervention.

The remarks reportedly caused considerable distress among students, who felt humiliated by comments targeting their families' livelihoods. Parents claimed that some children had become reluctant to attend school because of the teacher's alleged behaviour.

Angered by the allegations, parents approached the BEO's office and sought the teacher's immediate transfer and appropriate disciplinary action.

Call for an encouraging classroom

They said government schools should provide children from economically weaker sections with an encouraging learning environment and opportunities to improve their lives. They expressed concern that humiliating students over their family backgrounds could affect their confidence, education and future prospects.

The incident has also triggered demands for intervention by the Department of School Education. Members of the public have urged education officials to examine the complaint, speak to the students and parents, and take appropriate action based on the findings.

Government schools serve children from diverse economic backgrounds, making a respectful and supportive classroom environment essential. Parents have called for steps to ensure that students are treated with dignity and are not discouraged from pursuing their education because of their families' occupations or financial circumstances.

The allegations against the teacher are yet to be established.

RANEBENNUR FARMERS PROTEST

Over 40 farmers allege ₹1.30 crore paddy payment fraud

Farmers protesting outside the rice mill in Davanagere.

CH NEWS, DAVANAGERE

More than 40 farmers from Ranebennur taluk have accused the owners of Dandothi Rice Mill in Davanagere of failing to pay ₹1.30 crore for paddy purchased from them.

Alleging that the mill management has been evading payment and threatening those demanding their dues, the farmers have launched an indefinite day-and-night protest in front of the mill.

The farmers from Eeladalli, Uddaghatta and Belur villages reportedly sold their paddy to the mill, owned by Srinivas, through an intermediary named Siddappa.

According to the farmers, the mill management initially offered prices higher than the prevailing market rate and assured them that payments would be made in cash. However, after receiving the paddy consignments, the owners allegedly changed their stand and began delaying payments, citing RTGS bank transfers as the mode of settlement.

The farmers claim that an outstanding amount of approximately ₹1.30 crore remains unpaid.

The farmers further alleged that Srinivas and his associates threatened them when they approached the mill seeking payment. Frustrated by repeated delays, more than 40 farmers gathered outside the premises and began their protest. They also alleged that the owner left the premises as the protesters assembled.

Satyappa seeks funds for canal concrete lining

CH NEWS, HUNSUR

Satyappa, president of the Satya MAS Foundation, has urged the government to release funds immediately for concrete lining of the Shiriyuru and Husenapura canals originating from the Shiriyuru Dam in Hunsur taluk, stating that the necessary cost estimates have already been prepared and submitted.

He said the Shiriyuru canal, extending 16 km and serving around 1,600 acres, and the 16.5-km Husenapura canal are important for irrigating agricultural lands in the region. Concrete lining of both canals would ensure smoother water flow and reduce wastage, benefiting farmers.

Satyappa alleged that earlier works on the two canals, carried out at a cost of approximately ₹2 crore, were of poor quality, resulting in the waste of public funds. He said the present shortage of rainfall makes it particularly important to prevent water loss and ensure efficient irrigation.

He recalled that representations seeking concrete lining of the canals were submitted during the Praja Seva Ahavalu programmes held on September 5, 2026, in the presence of District In-charge Minister Yathindra Siddaramaiah, September 12 at Gavadagere and September 19 at Hangodu village.

A memorandum was also submitted to Chief Minister D.K. Shivakumar on October 3 during a public grievance redressal meeting in Piriyapatna, reiterating the demand for the project.

Satyappa appealed to officials of the Minor Irrigation Department to take immediate steps to release the required funds and begin the work without further delay.

He said the project would help conserve water, improve irrigation facilities and provide relief to farmers dependent on the canals. He also warned that the Satya MAS Foundation would continue its agitation until concrete lining of both canals was completed.

Tax accountant top scorer admits AI fraud in exams

SEOUL

The top scorer in this year's certified tax accountant exam admitted on Sunday to cheating in both rounds of the test using a miniature camera, a smartphone and generative artificial intelligence (AI) and said he had turned himself in to police.

The case is the latest in a series of AI-assisted cheating incidents in South Korea, where test-takers have recently been caught using AI glasses in university entrance exams and middle and high school tests.

The man, whose name has not been disclosed, made the admission on a lawyer's YouTube channel after the unusually high scores he revealed in a recent media interview sparked suspicions of cheating in online communities. He also said he had used the same method to cheat on a certified public accountant exam.

"I cheated by taking pictures of the questions with a miniature camera, sending them to AI, and checking the answers on a smartphone," the man said on the YouTube channel. "I wrote down everything I did in a statement of voluntary surrender and submitted it to the Seoul Metropolitan Police Agency."

The Ministry of Finance and Economy said it plans to move quickly to suspend the validity of his certificate confirming that he passed the exam.

Rajnath Singh calls for defence self-reliance

'India should strengthen indigenous inspection technologies and its Non-Destructive Testing ecosystem to improve preparedness and secure critical supply chains'.

HYDERABAD

Defence Minister Rajnath Singh on Sunday stressed that self-reliance in the defence sector is a strategic necessity for India, calling for the country to emerge not just as a user of advanced technologies but also as a developer, innovator and global leader in critical technological domains.

Virtually addressing the 36th Annual Conference on Non-Destructive Evaluation and Enabling Technologies and the 15th International Symposium on Non-Destructive Testing in Aerospace in Hyderabad, Singh highlighted the importance of strengthening India's Non-Destructive Testing (NDT) ecosystem to improve defence preparedness and technological independence.

He emphasised the need to develop indigenous capabilities in advanced inspection technologies, specialised sensors, evaluation equipment and associated software. According to him, building domestic expertise in these areas would reduce technological dependencies and help secure critical defence supply chains.

Singh also called for consistent quality assurance practices across the defence industrial ecosystem, stressing that the accuracy and reliability of testing results must remain uncompromised, particularly in strategic applications.

He underlined the significant role of Public Sector Undertakings, private manufacturers, start-ups and Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises in strengthening the country's NDT capabilities. He said inspection results must be accurate, reliable and traceable, supported by robust procedures, appropriate standards and assessments conducted by qualified professionals.

Explaining the importance of NDT technologies, Singh said they help examine the integrity of materials, components and structures without causing damage. Comparing the process with ultrasound and X-rays used in medical examinations, he highlighted their ability to detect internal defects without dismantling critical components.

Singh highlights India's vision

- Defence self-reliance is a strategic necessity
- India to become a developer and innovator of advanced technologies
- Strengthen indigenous Non-Destructive Testing capabilities
- Greater role for PSUs, private manufacturers, start-ups and MSMEs

CTI seeks GST cut on air purifiers amid demand surge in Delhi

NEW DELHI

Rising air pollution levels across the Delhi-NCR region have triggered a surge in health concerns, prompting an increasing number of people to install air purifiers in their homes and offices to protect themselves from polluted air.

Brijesh Goyal, Chairman of the Chamber of Trade and Industry (CTI), an organisation representing traders and entrepreneurs in Delhi and across the country, said demand for air purifiers has increased nearly fivefold over the past few days as pollution levels in the national capital have worsened.

"Previously, an average of four air purifiers were sold daily per shop; now, that figure has risen to approximately 20 units per day, with some companies even running out of stock," the CTI said.

CTI Chairman Brijesh Goyal and General Secretary Gurmeet Arora pointed out that air purifiers and HEPA (High-Efficiency Particulate Air) filters currently attract 18% Goods and Services Tax (GST), which they described as excessively high.

Goyal said the CTI has written to Union Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman, urging the government to reduce the GST rate on air purifiers and HEPA filters from the existing 18% to 5%.

The organisation argued that while the government continues to grapple with the pollution crisis, the high tax burden on air purifiers.

'India to outpace China with 7.2% growth in 2027'

NEW DELHI

The global economy is projected to grow 2.8% in 2027, marginally higher than the estimated 2.7% expansion in 2026, as easing energy prices and sustained investment in artificial intelligence (AI) are expected to offset tighter financial conditions, according to a Goldman Sachs Research report.

Goldman Sachs Chief Economist and Head of Research Jan Hatzius said the global economic outlook reflected changing growth drivers, particularly energy costs, technology investments and fiscal policy.

"We expect another year of solid but unremarkable GDP growth in 2027," Hatzius said.

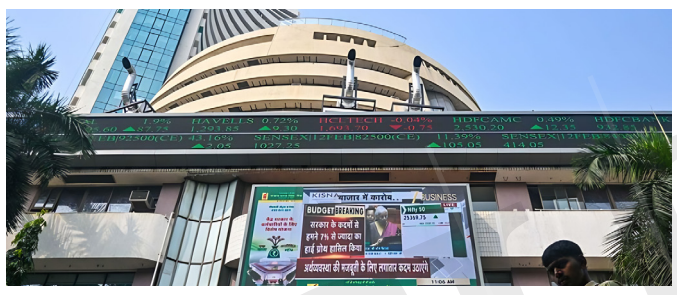

Among major emerging economies, India is projected to remain one of the fastest-growing, with its economy expected to expand by 7.2% in 2027, compared with 7.9% estimated for 2026.

The forecast is higher than the consensus growth estimate of 6.8%.

China's economy is projected to grow 4.5% in 2027, marginally above the consensus estimate of 4.4%. Exports are expected to support growth despite subdued domestic consumption and persistent challenges in the property sector.

The investment bank expects the United States, Japan and the United Kingdom to record growth above market consensus estimates. South Korea and Taiwan are also expected to benefit from sustained global demand for AI-related exports.

MARKETS BRACE FOR A VOLATILE WEEK

MUMBAI

Indian equities may witness volatility this week as investors monitor foreign inflows, crude prices, inflation concerns and Nvidia's earnings.

Indian equity markets are expected to remain volatile this week as investors closely monitor foreign institutional investor (FII) flows, crude oil prices, Nvidia's quarterly earnings and changing interest rate expectations.

The domestic benchmark indices witnessed profit booking towards the end of last week after recording a strong rally that had pushed the Sensex and Nifty higher. Despite the correction, sustained foreign inflows and resilient corporate earnings helped the markets retain their weekly gains.

On Friday, November 13, the BSE Sensex declined 319 points to close at 81,592, while the Nifty 50 dropped more than 155 points to settle at 25,144. The decline ended the Nifty's three-session winning streak.

Market sentiment was affected by concerns surrounding global artificial intelligence-related trade, rising crude oil prices and expectations that monetary policy will tighten after domestic inflation rose more sharply than expected.

Foreign investor activity will remain a major factor in determining market direction. FIIs continued their buying activity for the tenth consecutive session on Friday, purchasing Indian equities worth Rs 5,736.55 crore, according to provisional NSE data.

Crude oil prices will also remain in focus as geopolitical developments in the Middle East create uncertainty over global energy supplies. Brent crude is currently hovering near $96 per barrel.

Meanwhile, global technology stocks will attract attention ahead of Nvidia's quarterly earnings announcement scheduled for Tuesday, November 17.

The company's financial performance and management commentary could influence sentiment surrounding the global artificial intelligence industry.

NEW DELHI

Adi Vaani, an AI-powered translation and language platform, aims to bridge the digital divide for tribal communities. Starting with Santali, Bhili, Mundari and Gondi, Adi Vaani has expanded to offer text translation in nine tribal languages, a government factsheet said on Sunday.

Launched by the Ministry of Tribal Affairs on September 1, 2025, it was developed by a national consortium led by IIT Delhi, along with BITS Pilani, IIIT Hyderabad, IIIT Nava Raipur and the Tribal Research Institutes (TRIs) of Jharkhand, Odisha, Madhya Pradesh, Chhattisgarh and Meghalaya.

Over time, several other state Tribal Research Institutes (TRIs) also joined the initiative, further expanding its collaborative reach across the country.

35,000+ Android downloads

6,500 monthly users, around

9 tribal languages for text translation

13.9 lakh text sentences from State TRIs

It also provides speech translation, Optical Character Recognition (OCR), video subtitling, and access to more than 300 language primers. Primers are basic language learning resources designed to help new learners understand and practice tribal languages easily.

The platform has recorded over 35,000 Android downloads and around 6,500 monthly users, indicating its growing digital reach, said the factsheet.

"What makes Adi Vaani different is its community-based approach. Native speakers contribute words, sentences, and voice recordings through TRIs and AdiKosh. These are checked by language experts before being used to train AI models. The project aims to collect around 1,00,000 sentence pairs and 100 hours of speech recordings per language," said the factsheet.

As on October 15, 2026, State TRIs contributed approximately 13.9 lakh text sentences across ten languages and around 300 hours of speech data.

This approach combines modern technology with community knowledge to support the preservation, learning and everyday use of tribal languages. Each language passes through five phases, from data collection to integration on the platform, and the models are retrained as the community contributes more data.

According to Census 2011, India has about 10.45 crore Scheduled Tribe people, accounting for about 8.6% of the country's population. Adi Vaani works with a total of 13 tribal languages across different regions of India.

POISON IN THE AIR, POLITICS IN THE WAY: THE PUBLIC PAYS THE PRICE

LALIT GARGG

Festivals are meant to spread happiness, not poison the very air we breathe. Diwali, the festival of lights, symbolises illumination, joy, celebration and goodwill. But when the brilliance of festivities fills the skies with toxic smoke, when children and the elderly struggle to breathe, and when ordinary citizens are forced to yearn for clean air, it becomes imperative to reflect seriously on our festive traditions and collective social responsibilities. The irony is that even an issue as critical to human survival as pollution has become entangled in the smoke of political controversy. When people's very lives are at stake, viewing such a problem through the narrow lenses of religion, caste or political ideology is not merely unfortunate; it reflects a disturbing lack of social sensitivity.

Actress and environmental activist Dia Mirza recently raised awareness about the air and noise pollution caused by firecrackers. As part of its environment-friendly Diwali campaign, the Brihanmumbai Municipal Corporation (BMC) released her video message. However, following political controversy, the video was taken down. This naturally raises an important question: How can speaking against pollution become a matter of controversy? How can an artist's appeal for environmental protection be interpreted as opposition to a religion or a festival? The Bombay High Court's direction to restore the video sends a powerful message that voices advocating public welfare must not be silenced under political pressure. Environmental protection is neither the exclusive domain of any individual, political party nor religion; it is a shared responsibility of the entire society.

The example of Mumbai further exposes the gravity of the situation. Traditionally, Mumbai has enjoyed relatively better air circulation than Delhi because of its coastal location and sea breezes. Yet, the city is now increasingly grappling with a serious pollution crisis. According to the BMC's Environment Status Report 2025–26, 13 out of Mumbai's 14 air-quality monitoring stations recorded annual average PM10 levels exceeding the national permissible limit of 60 micrograms per cubic metre. In Chembur and the Bandra-Kurla Complex, the level reached as high as 125 micrograms per cubic metre. These figures are not merely statistics; they raise serious questions about an urban development model in which buildings continue to grow taller while the share of clean air available to citizens keeps shrinking.

> "Let us celebrate the festival of light, not turn it into a festival of pollution. This is the call of the hour and the true, enlightened meaning of a celebration rooted in wisdom, compassion and collective responsibility."
> LALIT GARGG

It is essential to understand that neither Mumbai nor Delhi can absolve itself of responsibility by placing the entire blame for pollution on Diwali firecrackers. Dust generated at construction sites, accumulated road dust, vehicular emissions, industrial pollution, open burning of garbage and inadequate urban planning are among the major contributors. Firecrackers aggravate the pollution crisis during festive periods, but the sources of pollution remain active throughout the year. Therefore, imposing restrictions only around Diwali and turning a blind eye to the problem during the rest of the year is not a solution; it is merely an exhibition of seasonal activism. The fact that 13 monitoring stations in Mumbai have recorded pollution levels above the national standard makes it clear that environmental protection cannot be left to the mercy of sea breezes.

The situation in Delhi and the National Capital Region is even more alarming. With the onset of winter, falling temperatures, slower wind speeds and the accumulation of pollutants in the atmosphere cause air quality to deteriorate rapidly. Residents of Delhi, Ghaziabad, Noida, Gurugram and Faridabad are compelled to confront this toxic environment year after year. Morning walks, once regarded as a means of maintaining good health, increasingly become a potential health hazard. Children suffer from coughing and respiratory irritation, elderly people experience breathing difficulties, and those with pre-existing health conditions are forced to make repeated visits to hospitals. When the air that should carry the music of life becomes saturated with poison, all claims of development begin to sound hollow.

In this context, the intervention of the Supreme Court is significant. The Court granted temporary permission in Delhi-NCR for the limited sale and use of certified green firecrackers during Diwali, subject to prescribed timings. For November 7 and 8, the permitted hours were 6 a.m. to 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. Thereafter, a complete ban came into effect again from November 9. The Court has also emphasised strict monitoring to prevent violations and to ensure that conventional firecrackers are not illegally marketed under the label of green firecrackers.

But the fundamental question remains: Why do strict judicial orders on paper so often prove ineffective on the ground? The sale of conventional firecrackers disguised as green alternatives, fireworks beyond the permitted hours and the open trade in prohibited materials expose serious weaknesses in the administrative machinery. Merely framing laws is not enough; their impartial and stringent enforcement is equally essential. If violators continue to enjoy political patronage or benefit from administrative indifference, even the directives of constitutional courts will simply disappear into the haze of pollution.

Diwali can be celebrated with equal enthusiasm through limited use of firecrackers, community celebrations and environmentally responsible alternatives. The true spirit of a festival lies not in the intensity of noise, but in the happiness of hearts and the harmony of society. This is not an interference with anyone's religious freedom; rather, it is an expression of respect for the fundamental right of others to life and good health. The greatest irony is that when an actress like Dia Mirza uses her public platform to promote environmental protection, her message is dragged into a political controversy. On November 3, the Bombay High Court directed the BMC to re-upload her withdrawn video and observed that giving a political or communal colour to an environmental issue was inappropriate. This observation should serve as a wake-up call to our democratic conscience.

What we need today is a collective commitment involving governments, the judiciary, municipal authorities, political parties, the industrial sector, social organisations and ordinary citizens. Dust-control measures must be strictly implemented at construction sites; vehicular emissions must be closely monitored; public transport must be strengthened; the burning of garbage must be prohibited; and industries responsible for pollution must be held accountable. Citizens, too, must act responsibly by avoiding unnecessary use of firecrackers, refraining from burning waste and reducing excessive dependence on private vehicles.

Ultimately, the question is not simply whether firecrackers should be burst during Diwali. The real question is whether we will be able to provide future generations with clean air and a safe environment in which to live. Politics has its own place, just as religion and traditions have their own significance. But no celebration is greater than life, and no tradition can be more important than health. We must remember that pollution does not distinguish between caste, religion, language or political ideology before entering our lungs. The air belongs to everyone, and the crisis threatening it is a shared crisis for all. Let the lamps of Diwali illuminate our homes and courtyards. Let happiness spread and celebrations flourish, but let no one's breath be plunged into darkness.

THE MARKET FOR STORYTELLERS AND THE BUSINESS OF FAITH

When religion moves from being a spiritual practice to a medium of display, propaganda and fundraising, society should introspect.

For centuries, India has been recognized as a land of spirituality, religious tolerance, and moral values. Here, religion means not only worship, rituals, and temple visits, but also the embodiment of truth, compassion, service, sacrifice, and humanity. Saints, sages, and wise men have used religion as a means to awaken the inner consciousness of humanity. The stories of the Ramayana, Mahabharata, Shrimad Bhagavad Gita, and the Puranas have taught generations the art of living. But today, amid the growing splendor of religious events and stories, a serious question arises: Is religion truly a means of public welfare or is it gradually transforming into a massive commercial enterprise?

Today, a vast world of storytelling has emerged in various parts of the country. Large pandals, grand stages, impressive decorations, expensive sound equipment, special guests, publicity vehicles, and extensive publicity on social media are becoming hallmarks of religious events. The popularity of storytellers is now measured not only by their knowledge and ideas, but also by the number of their followers, the grandeur of the events, and their fame. The crowds that gather at some storytellers' events resemble a major entertainment event. Along with religious discourse, fame, publicity, and displays of financial strength are also becoming visible.

Storytelling is a respectable and important tradition in itself. Storytellers explain the essence of religious texts to society, impart moral teachings, and connect people to their cultural roots. Many saints and scholars have been working for years to spread spiritual awareness in society without any pretense. The problem lies not in the tradition of storytelling, but in its commercialization. When the cost of the storyteller becomes more important than the quality of the story, when the number of devotees and the amount of offerings become the measure of an event's success, and when economic power begins to be displayed in the name of religion, introspection becomes necessary.

Today, many religious events involve huge expenditures on the arrival of storytellers, stage arrangements, accommodation, security, and other amenities. A competition for prestige is also evident among organizers and devotees. Discussions about who can organize the largest event, who drew the largest crowd, and which prominent figure graced which storyteller's stage begin to overshadow the core message of the story. In some places, financial transactions and expensive arrangements are even publicly discussed in the name of storytelling. While it is not appropriate to view all storytellers or events with the same prism, it is society's responsibility to question this changing trend.

The most worrying situation arises when religious sentiments are used as a means of financial gain. Devotees donate out of their faith. Some dedicate a portion of their earnings, while others contribute their life savings to religious events. This is their personal devotion and should be respected. However, transparency in donations, their use, and the accountability of religious institutions are equally important. If funds collected in the name of religion are used for personal luxury and publicity rather than public service, the faith weakens.

Ironically, while offerings of gold and silver jewelry and precious items to temples are increasing, many children in society are still forced to sleep hungry. Many families, due to financial constraints, are unable to provide for their children's education, treatment, and food. Poor patients wait for help in hospitals, while schools remain resource-poor. In such a situation, it naturally begs the question: should the primary purpose of religious faith be lavish offerings and grand celebrations? Shouldn't the prosperity of temples also enrich the lives of the poor in the surrounding areas?

The true beauty of religion is revealed only when it wipes the tears of the oppressed, feeds the hungry, educates the uneducated, and offers hope to the hopeless. Lord Rama's ideals embody dignity and public welfare; Shri Krishna's message emphasizes action and duty; and Buddha's teachings embody compassion and nonviolence. Simply reciting these great traditions from the pulpit is not enough. Putting them into practice is true righteousness.

Social media also plays a significant role in the popularity of storytellers. Sermons of a few minutes, attractive costumes, emotional presentations, and impressive dialogue spread rapidly. This has led to the spread of religious ideas, but it has also increased the competition for showmanship and popularity. Serious religious topics are often presented in an entertaining manner. There is also a tendency to influence devotees through emotional statements and claims of miracles. In such situations, listeners should exercise discretion. A person's popularity is not automatically proof of their knowledge, character, or morality.

Society must also understand that not every storyteller is a businessman, and not every large-scale event is inappropriate. Expenses for organizing religious events are natural. Many storytellers serve selflessly and bring positive change to people's lives through their sermons. Therefore, criticism should not be directed at individuals, but at trends that link religion to wealth, prestige, and personal gain.

The government and social organizations also have a responsibility to encourage financial transparency in religious institutions. Devotees should be informed about the use of donations. Religious platforms should not be used to spread superstition, discrimination, and social animosity. Along with Katha events, programs such as blood donation, health camps, education for underprivileged children, cow service, and assistance to the needy should also be prioritized.

The need today is not to discontinue the Katha, but to revive its original purpose. Katha narrators should use their popularity to promote morality, harmony, and a spirit of service in society. Devotees should also understand the true message of the Katha, rather than being influenced only by miracles and sentimentality. Religion is not the property of any individual, but the common heritage of humanity.

Ultimately, the question isn't how big the Katha became, how grand the pandal was, or how much offerings were collected. The real question is how many people felt compassion after listening to the Katha, how many of the needy received help, and how many people adopted morality in their behavior. The day the success of religious events is measured by service, education, compassion, and human welfare, that day religion will be revealed in its true form. Protecting faith from becoming a commodity is not just the responsibility of storytellers, but of every devotee and the entire society.

STROKE ISN'T ONLY A GRANDPARENT'S PROBLEM

DR. MAQSOOD AHMED A. R.

Stroke is often perceived as a health crisis affecting the elderly. Rarely do people associate it with adults in their mid-30s or early-40s. However, available medical data across Indian hospitals contradicts this perception. In fact, recent studies on stroke reveal that young adults accounted for nearly 16.7 percent of all stroke patients, a deeply concerning statistic for individuals in their 30s or 40s. The root cause is increasingly pointing towards a mix of genetics and everyday lifestyle choices. Among the risk factors, high blood pressure tops the list, closely followed by abnormal cholesterol or dyslipidaemia. The combination of the two in any individual would only mean heightened danger. Adding to this danger is the concerning fact that many young people do not regularly check their numbers, which may lead to hypertension going undetected for years. Add a family history of heart disease or stroke, and the risk climbs even higher. Diabetes is the third major risk factor, alongside smoking and chewing tobacco. The condition causes gradual damage to blood vessels over time, and smoking and chewing tobacco narrow the arteries. Add to it lifestyle factors such as chronic stress, poor sleep, long desk hours, and minimal exercise, and your body ends up taking a heavy toll. Researchers link the global rise in strokes among young adults directly to these growing daily habits.

When the Heart is the Source

Sometimes a stroke is actually created in the heart and a clot travels directly to the brain. A big one: rheumatic heart disease, which is shockingly common in India. Another is a patent foramen ovale (PFO), a small hole in the wall between the upper chambers of the heart, which can let a rogue clot slip through.

Undisclosed and Uncommon Triggers

- Tears in the neck artery (dissections) caused by a sudden neck jerk, trauma, or injury.
- Blood clotting disorders causing blood to clot easily.
- A specific type of clot in the brain's veins called Cerebral Venous Thrombosis (CVT), one of the leading causes of stroke in young Indians.
- Tuberculous meningitis infection causing swelling in the brain's vital blood vessels.
- Certain systemic triggers such as severe migraines, and hormonal changes related to oral contraceptive use, pregnancy and the postpartum period, as well as recreational drug use.

What can young adults do?

Don't wait for a wake-up call. Get your blood pressure, blood sugar, and cholesterol checked once a year, even if you feel completely healthy. Ditch tobacco, keep your body moving, and take any prescribed medications consistently. Above all, never dismiss sudden symptoms assuming you're "too young" for a stroke.

Remember BE FAST: sudden loss of balance (B), eye symptoms like double vision or blurred vision (E), a drooping face (F), a weak arm (A) and slurred speech (S) need an urgent (T, time) visit to a hospital with brain imaging facilities, a stroke-ready hospital. Recognise BE FAST and act fast. Call 108 and note the time symptoms began.

If you spot these signs, rush to a stroke-ready hospital without delay. Note the exact time symptoms started and call emergency services (108) immediately. Youth might feel like a shield, but age offers no real immunity here. Early check-ups and fast action are what truly save lives.

Make Pavements Safe Again

A short walk can become an obstacle course when pavements are broken, blocked by parked vehicles, or missing altogether. Children, older people, and wheelchair users often have to move into traffic simply to get past. Local authorities should repair damaged surfaces, keep crossings clear, and install ramps where pavements meet the road. They should also make it easy to report obstructions and publish a schedule for repairs so residents can see when problems will be addressed. Drivers can help by leaving pavements clear, even during brief stops. Walking should be a safe option for anyone going to school, catching a bus, or buying groceries. A continuous, accessible pavement can make these everyday journeys safer and easier for the whole community. – Shobi

Extend Public Library Hours

Public libraries give people a place to read, study, and use the internet without having to buy anything. Yet limited opening hours can put these services out of reach for students, workers, and parents. Library managers could survey readers and try opening on one evening or weekend morning each week. They could then use attendance figures and reader feedback to decide whether to keep the extra hours. Any trial should account for staffing costs and give employees predictable schedules. A change in opening times could give students somewhere quiet to finish assignments and job seekers time to complete applications. It could also give families a chance to browse the shelves and choose books together at the end of the week. – Prabu

A CASHLESS WORLD STILL NEEDS CASH

A market stall can have a full basket of vegetables, a willing customer and an agreed price, yet still lose a sale because a payment terminal cannot connect. For most shoppers, that means walking to another stall. For the seller, it means taking unsold food home. For the customer who has already spent the last of their cash on the journey, it may mean coming home empty-handed. Digital payments make everyday purchases easier for many people. Keeping cash available for essential transactions would preserve a simple choice when a phone, a network or a bank fails at the checkout counter.

Cash gives the person receiving a payment something they can use immediately. That matters to a seller who uses the morning's takings to buy stock for the afternoon, or a worker who needs to pay for transport after being paid for a shift. Digital settlement can also be quick, but its terms vary. A customer who sees a successful payment may assume the seller has received money they can spend. A small business operating on narrow margins has to care about the distinction. It should be able to weigh that cost alongside the convenience a particular payment service offers its customers.

Control over money also matters inside a household. A person whose partner monitors a joint account may need to make an ordinary purchase without having to explain where they went. A teenager can learn to budget by deciding how much of a small allowance to spend and how much to save. Someone who has difficulty reading a screen may find it easier to count familiar notes. Each of these people has practical reasons to want cash. Giving them that option preserves a measure of independence without requiring them to disclose their circumstances to a cashier, a service provider or a relative.

Businesses have serious reasons to favor digital payments. Cash takes time to count, creates security risks and requires a place to deposit takings. A small shop cannot solve those problems on its own if nearby banking services have disappeared. Any effort to preserve cash should therefore consider the whole transaction, including what happens after closing time. Shared deposit facilities and reliable access to withdrawals can reduce the burden on businesses and customers. Payment providers can also help by making fees and settlement times clear enough for shopkeepers to compare services before signing contracts that will affect every sale they make.

Public agencies and businesses that supply daily necessities have a stronger duty to keep payment options open. An office collecting an essential fee or a grocer serving an area with few alternatives can leave people stranded by insisting on a single way to pay. A practical rule would require a usable cash option for essential in-person transactions, with reasonable allowances for safety and the availability of change. A separate counter can work if it keeps comparable hours and is easy to find. The test is whether someone can complete the transaction without making another journey or depending on another person.

The best argument for keeping both forms of payment is visible on the days when either one becomes difficult to use. Someone who has lost a wallet may still be able to buy a meal with a phone. Someone whose phone has stopped working can buy the same meal with a note. Both customers should be able to make that choice without paying a penalty for it. The next time a merchant invests in a faster checkout, it is worth setting aside room for a cash drawer too. It takes up little space compared with the people it can keep in the queue.

FAMILY CAREGIVERS DESERVE TIME TO REST

When a relative comes home from hospital, the family may be told how to change a dressing, which pills to give and when to return for a checkup. The next morning, somebody will still have to help that person out of bed, prepare breakfast and decide whether it is safe to leave for work. These duties may last a week or become the shape of the next five years. By the time a family realizes it needs help, the person providing most of the care may already have cut their hours, used up their leave and stopped making plans of their own.

A few hours of dependable relief can change what that person is able to do. They can attend a medical appointment, take an uninterrupted nap or spend time with a child who also needs them. The relief has to be dependable because arranging it is work in itself. A caregiver who spends a morning calling agencies, checking prices and explaining medication schedules may have little time left by the time someone arrives. A regular visit from a trained worker, at a time the household has helped choose, gives everyone a chance to plan a part of the week with some confidence.

> "The value of a caregiver's afternoon off is easy to see in the hours that follow. She returns with enough energy to sit at the table with her father and hear what he wanted to tell her at breakfast."
> — VIDHYASHREE J.

The person receiving care has a stake in how these visits are organized. Some people feel uneasy about being washed or dressed by someone unfamiliar. Others welcome a chance to talk with someone outside the family or take a short outing at their own pace. Offering a choice of workers and allowing time for an introduction can make the service easier to accept. So can asking the person receiving care what they want to do during the visit. They may prefer help preparing a favorite lunch to another hour spent watching television while somebody else decides what counts as good care.

Employers can help by giving workers a way to adjust their schedules when a relative needs regular care. The day of a medical appointment, for instance, is often known weeks in advance. A change of shift may cover it without costing the worker an entire day's wages. There will also be emergencies that require paid leave, particularly for people who cannot afford to lose a shift. A clear policy makes it possible to ask for that time before a crisis becomes a resignation. It also helps supervisors arrange cover without relying on informal favors that some workers are better placed to secure than others.

Health and social services can make the first offer of help earlier. A discharge conversation should include a plain question about who will provide care at home and how much that person can realistically do. Staff should be ready to hear that a relative has a bad back, works nights or lives a long bus ride away. Those details affect whether a care plan will work. When a temporary gap is apparent, a short period of scheduled home visits can give a family time to learn what is involved and decide what it can sustain once the initial visits come to an end.

Families will continue to do a great deal of caring because people want to be there for one another. A daughter may know exactly how to help her father through a difficult morning, and he may trust her in ways he trusts few other people. With reliable help, she can still do that while keeping an appointment or taking a walk of her own.

HEAT SAFETY BELONGS ON EVERY WORKSITE

A worker unloading a truck on a hot afternoon has several decisions to make before asking for a break. Will someone else have to finish the load? Will the supervisor think the worker is falling behind? Will the next shift go to someone who keeps going? People can make sensible decisions about their health only when they have room to act on them. During dangerous heat, that means arranging the workday so workers can pause without losing pay or risking future work. Waiting for someone to admit they feel ill leaves too much riding on a conversation they may be afraid to start.

Heat can build up indoors as well as outside. An enclosed kitchen, a laundry or a warehouse with poor ventilation can stay hot after the sun goes down. Physical effort and protective clothing can add to the strain. The conditions that matter are the ones workers actually face while doing the job. A temperature read in an office tells a supervisor little about the air beside a bank of ovens. Checking the hottest work areas during the busiest hours can show where a fan, better ventilation, a change in the order of tasks or a shorter rotation would make a difference.

Employers should provide drinking water close to where people work and a genuinely cooler place to recover. Both details matter. Water across a wide yard may be easy to reach on paper and difficult to reach during a busy shift. A break taken in a parked vehicle that has been baking in the sun offers little relief. Supervisors should schedule rest before workers are exhausted, and the schedule should cover temporary staff and contractors as well as permanent employees. People sharing the same loading dock should be able to take the same precautions, even when their paychecks come from different companies.

Some adjustments cost money, and they can be especially hard for a small business with a delivery window or a large order to fill. Planning can make those costs easier to absorb. A business may be able to move heavy jobs to cooler hours, bring deliveries forward or tell customers when a heat plan will affect service. Buyers and contractors have a role here because they often set the deadlines. A contract that allows work to slow during dangerous heat gives the firm carrying out the job room to protect its staff without being penalized for missing a deadline it cannot safely meet.

Workplaces also need an emergency plan that people can use under pressure. A worker who becomes confused or collapses in the heat needs immediate help. Coworkers should know who will call emergency services, where to find cooling supplies and how to direct responders to the right entrance. The plan should be explained to new arrivals before they begin, in language they understand. Supervisors should pay particular attention when someone is new to hot work or returning after time away. A person's eagerness to make a good impression can make it harder for them to say they need time to adjust.

Rules governing hot work should give employers a clear minimum to follow and workers a way to report unsafe conditions without jeopardizing their jobs. The aim is a change people can notice on an ordinary shift. A supervisor sees the temperature rise and adjusts the workload. A worker stops for water while there is still a queue of jobs. Everyone knows that the extra time has been allowed for. At the end of the day the truck is unloaded, perhaps a little later than usual, and the people who did the work can go home well enough to enjoy the evening.

LONELINESS GROWS WHEN GATHERING PLACES DISAPPEAR

A person can eat lunch alone for years and enjoy the quiet. Loneliness often has more to do with what happens when they want company. Is there somewhere to go without arranging a visit, buying a meal or explaining why they have come? Can they get there after work or when the weather turns? A neighborhood may have plenty of people and still offer few chances for them to meet. Keeping ordinary gathering places open gives people a way to become familiar to one another before either side has to take the sometimes difficult step of asking for friendship.

A library reading room, a public bench or a community hall can help because people have reasons to return. A man comes to read the paper, a parent waits while a child chooses a book, and a woman drops by to see whether the rain will pass. The first conversation may be about the weather or whether a seat is free. After several weeks someone remembers a name. Later, one person notices that another has missed a regular visit. This slow familiarity has value. Few people would think to schedule it, and it can be hard to recover once a familiar place closes.

Opening hours determine who gets to participate. A community room that closes before most shifts end serves the people who can visit during the day. A good evening program can still be out of reach for someone who needs two buses to get home. Small operating decisions deserve the same attention as the building itself. A seat with a backrest can make a visit possible for someone who cannot stand for long. A well-lit entrance and a usable toilet can let people stay longer. The people who rarely show up may have the clearest ideas about what would make it possible to come.

Money matters too. Cafés and other businesses can be valuable places to meet, and regular customers can feel genuinely welcome there. Someone who has to watch every expense may only be able to afford that welcome once a month. Public spaces can give that person a place to spend half an hour without doing the arithmetic first. They can also offer a place for teenagers to go between school and home, or for people without much room at home to meet a friend. An open door serves a wider public when a visit fits into the budgets and routines of the people nearby.

Communities often organize events when they want to bring people together. A monthly concert or a weekend fair can draw a crowd and give people something to talk about afterward. Regular hours give those encounters a chance to continue. A hall might host a repair session one evening a week and leave part of the room open for people who simply want to sit. Staff can ask visitors which hours they use and invite nearby residents to say what keeps them away. A room that is cold, noisy or awkward to reach may need a modest adjustment before another event will make much difference.

> "Opening hours determine who gets to participate."
>
> ANNA B.

When budgets are tight, it is easy to count the cost of keeping a building open and harder to count the value of the visits it makes possible. Local authorities can look at how often people return, how long they stay and whether different age groups use the space. They can also ask a plain question when considering a closure.

Where will the people who come here go next week? Some will find another place. For others, a familiar room within walking distance is what makes leaving the house worthwhile, even on a day when they have nothing particular to do.

REPAIR SHOULD BE AN ORDINARY CHOICE

A washing machine that stops draining can turn a Saturday morning into a decision about several hundred hours of household labor. Can the owner find someone who will come out? Can that person obtain the part? How long can the household manage without the machine? The choice should depend on the condition of the appliance, the cost of the job and the owner's needs. Too often, a missing part or inaccessible service information settles the question first. Manufacturers should make ordinary repairs possible for a reasonable period and tell buyers how long that support will last before they pay for the product.

Getting a repair estimate should be easier than it is. A technician may have to open a machine and run tests before identifying the fault, and that work deserves payment. The customer deserves to know the diagnostic fee and whether it will count toward the repair. A clear estimate should say which part has failed, how much the job will cost and how long the part is likely to take to arrive. With that information, a household can compare the expense with what it would pay for a replacement and decide whether it can wait. Uncertainty can be enough to end the conversation.

Independent repairers can keep more products in service if they can obtain suitable parts and the instructions needed to fit them. Some work involves electrical hazards or requires specialized equipment. Service information should identify these risks and explain the skills and tools a job requires. For straightforward repairs, there is a practical case for designing products so parts that commonly wear out can be reached and replaced without damaging other components. A technician should be able to tell, before accepting a job, whether the machine can be opened with the tools available and whether the replacement part will work once it is installed.

A product that lasts longer can save money, but the price of keeping it going depends on the household. A parent who needs a working refrigerator today may quite reasonably choose quick delivery over a repair appointment next week. A tenant may have little say over which appliance a landlord installs or how long a repair takes. A strong local repair trade can change some of those calculations by offering shorter waits and more predictable prices. That trade depends on a steady supply of parts. Few workshops can afford to spend their afternoons searching for components each time a common model breaks.

Public buyers can encourage manufacturers to provide better support. When an institution orders hundreds of appliances, it can ask bidders to specify parts prices, service terms and expected delivery times. Those answers can be considered alongside the purchase price. A low price at delivery may prove expensive if the buyer later has to remove several machines from service while waiting for an uncommon part. Publishing the criteria also gives suppliers time to plan. A company already providing clear instructions and dependable parts can show what those arrangements are worth over the years that the equipment is expected to be in use.

A household shopping for an appliance should be able to ask a question that sales staff can answer directly. What happens if an ordinary part fails after the guarantee expires? A useful answer tells the buyer which parts are available, for how long, and where someone can get them fitted. That information can help someone choose a machine they can afford to own as well as buy. Years later, when the drum stops turning with a full load inside, the owner can make a decision based on what the machine needs and what the repair is worth to them.

Tribal regions see fresh momentum through development

DHARAMJAIGARH

Chhattisgarh's tribal regions are witnessing progress through sports, education and welfare initiatives, creating new opportunities for young people.

BJP national president Nitin Nabin on Sunday said tribal regions of Chhattisgarh were witnessing a new phase of development, with sports, education and welfare initiatives creating opportunities for young people. Addressing the state-level Tribal Pride Day celebrations virtually, he highlighted changes in Bastar, once associated with Naxalism and violence.

Nabin was scheduled to attend in person but could not reach Dharamjaigarh due to adverse weather. He said observing Bhagwan Birsa Munda's birth anniversary as Janjatiya Gaurav Divas had brought national recognition to tribal icons and their contributions.

Highlighting the Bastar Olympics, Nabin said more than 1.5 lakh people participated in 2024, while the number rose to nearly four lakh in 2025.

He also cited educational progress, noting that Chhattisgarh had 75 Eklavya Model Residential Schools. In 2025-26, 408 students from these institutions qualified in JEE and other competitive examinations, including 346 who cleared JEE Main.

Praising initiatives under Chief Minister Vishnu Deo Sai, Nabin referred to central schemes such as PM-JANMAN, the Dharti Aaba Janjatiya Gram Utkarsh Abhiyan and Pradhan Mantri Awas Yojana.

Nabin recalled Bhagwan Birsa Munda, Veer Narayan Singh, Veer Gundadhur and Shaheed Gend Singh. He stressed that preserving tribal culture and identity was as important as economic development.

Govt health spend triples, households pay less

NEW DELHI

India's government health expenditure tripled over the decade to 2023-24, while the share of healthcare costs paid directly by households fell, according to the National Health Accounts estimates released by the Union Health Ministry. The figures point to a shift towards greater public financing of healthcare.

Government spending rose from ₹1.30 lakh crore in 2013-14 to ₹4.14 lakh crore in 2023-24. Meanwhile, out-of-pocket expenditure (OOPE) declined from 64.2 per cent to 42.7 per cent of total health expenditure, a fall of 21.5 percentage points. The household share edged down from 43.4 per cent in 2022-23.

The government's share of total health expenditure increased by 14.9 percentage points over the decade. Per capita government health spending climbed from ₹1,042 to ₹2,959. Public expenditure on primary healthcare reached ₹1.53 lakh crore, supporting services such as preventive care, disease screening, essential medicines and diagnostics through facilities including Ayushman Arogya Mandirs.

Insurance share grows

The estimates also recorded growth in social security spending on health, which rose from six per cent of total health expenditure in 2013-14 to 11 per cent in 2023-24. Private health insurance's share increased from 3.4 per cent to 10.2 per cent. The figures include contributions from government-funded and state insurance schemes, social health insurance and medical spending for government employees.

What drove the shift

The ministry attributed the changing financing pattern to measures including Ayushman Bharat-Pradhan Mantri Jan Arogya Yojana, free drugs and diagnostics initiatives, the National Dialysis Programme, Jan Aushadhi and AMRIT pharmacies.

Parliament winter session may see quota push

NEW DELHI

The winter session of Parliament is likely to begin in the first week of December, with the government prioritising a constitution amendment bill linking women's reservation to delimitation. The legislation seeks to increase the Lok Sabha's strength from 543 seats to a maximum of 850, paving the way for 33 per cent reservation for women in Parliament and state assemblies before the 2029 general elections.

The bill faces a significant numbers challenge. A Constitution amendment requires support from two-thirds of members present and voting. In the 543-member House, the threshold is 361 votes. The ruling National Democratic Alliance has 320 MPs and needs opposition support. Three vacancies have reduced the Lok Sabha's current strength to 540.

The political atmosphere could complicate proceedings. Opposition parties have intensified protests over the Special Intensive Revision of electoral rolls and are demanding Chief Election Commissioner Gyanesh Kumar's resignation. Their campaign could spill into Parliament, raising the possibility of disruptions. An NDA MP said voting on the bill would require the House to function smoothly. A senior government functionary expressed confidence that it could pass by 15 to 18 votes.

The government is reportedly considering increasing Lok Sabha seats by 50 per cent across states, addressing concerns that delimitation could disadvantage southern states. The proposal is also understood to retain the existing inter-state distribution of seats based on the 1971 Census, though no final decision has been made.

The Monsoon session was adjourned sine die on August 13 but has not been prorogued, fuelling speculation about the next sitting. The bill failed to secure the required numbers during a special sitting on April 17, making the winter session a crucial test for the ruling alliance.

BJP appoints 6 leaders for UP voter enrolment

LUCKNOW

The Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) has appointed six organisational leaders to oversee voter enrolment efforts across Uttar Pradesh following the Special Intensive Revision (SIR) of electoral rolls. The move comes after Chief Minister Yogi Adityanath said more than 1.27 crore names were missing from the state's voter lists. The appointments were made on Saturday, according to party sources.

The leaders have been assigned to six regions to coordinate door-to-door campaigns and help residents check their details and enrol. Those appointed are Karamveer from Chhattisgarh, Chandrashekhar from Madhya Pradesh, Ajay Kumar from Rajasthan, N. Madhukar, who handles Andhra Pradesh and Telangana, Pawan Sai from Jharkhand, and Satish Dhond from Maharashtra.

The decision follows a meeting in Lucknow attended by Deputy Chief Minister Keshav Prasad Maurya. Adityanath said thousands of voters were missing from electoral rolls in several Assembly constituencies where the BJP had won by narrow margins.

He said Form 6 would soon be made available at ration shops across the state. District presidents were assigned a target of enrolling 10,000 to 15,000 voters in each of Uttar Pradesh's 402 Assembly constituencies.

Adityanath criticised the SIR exercise on November 13, citing the reported deletion of more than 1.27 crore names. Uttar Pradesh sends 80 members to the Lok Sabha. In the 2024 general election, the BJP won 33 seats in the state, down from 62 in 2019.

ATF TAX RELIEF EXTENDED

Maharashtra extends 7% VAT relief on aviation fuel

MUMBAI

The Maharashtra government has extended the concessional seven per cent value-added tax (VAT) on aviation turbine fuel (ATF) until April 14, 2027, allowing airlines to continue benefiting from the reduced tax rate for another five months. The decision was announced through a Finance Department notification dated November 12.

The earlier concession, which was scheduled to expire on November 14, was introduced on May 14, when the state government reduced VAT on ATF from 18 per cent to seven per cent for six months, effective May 15. The lower rate applies to duty-paid aviation fuel.

The extension is expected to provide continued relief to airlines operating in the state, particularly at major airports in Mumbai, Navi Mumbai and Pune, where the earlier tax structure included an 18 per cent levy. Aviation turbine fuel is one of the biggest operating expenses for airlines, accounting for approximately 40 to 50 per cent of their total costs.

VAT on jet fuel

BEFORE MAY 15	TILL APRIL 14, 2027
18% the earlier rate	7% the concession, extended

The initial tax reduction came amid rising global crude oil prices and disruptions to airline operations caused by the conflict in West Asia. Higher fuel prices had increased financial pressure on carriers, prompting the state to introduce the temporary concession.

The extension is expected to help airlines manage fuel-related expenses and maintain operational costs. However, the overall financial benefit will depend on other factors, including fuel prices and additional operating expenditure.

PM Modi announces ₹3000 cr tribal development projects

Prime Minister Narendra Modi announces nearly ₹3,000 crore in tribal development projects, highlighting poverty reduction, welfare initiatives and improved security in tribal regions.

NEW DELHI

Prime Minister Narendra Modi linked poverty reduction and improved security in tribal regions to government welfare initiatives, while announcing development projects worth nearly ₹3,000 crore. He addressed the Janjatiya Gaurav Diwas programme in Gadchiroli, Maharashtra, through video conferencing.

Modi said nearly 50 crore people had moved out of extreme poverty over the past 12 to 13 years, citing a World Bank report. He described this as a major achievement, saying it reflected collective efforts by citizens and society.

The Prime Minister said the Centre had allocated more than ₹1 lakh crore for the PM-JANMAN scheme and the Dharti Aaba Janjatiya Gram Utkarsh Abhiyan to improve facilities in tribal areas. He cited housing, healthcare, electricity, sanitation and financial inclusion programmes as contributors.

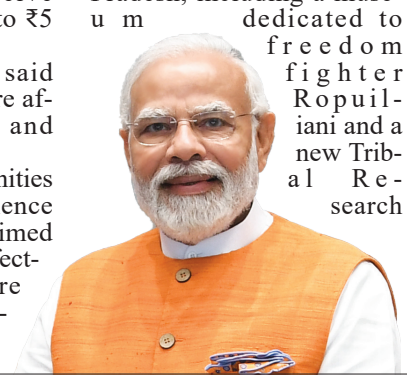

According to Modi, more than four crore permanent houses had been built for poor families, while electricity had reached 18,000 previously unelectrified villages. Under Ayushman Bharat, eligible families receive health coverage of up to ₹5 lakh.

On security, Modi said nearly 125 districts were affected by Naxalism and Maoism in 2014.

He said tribal communities had suffered from violence and restrictions, but claimed that areas previously affected by insurgency were now experiencing greater security.

The Prime Minister said more than 170 tribal development projects had been inaugurated across several States, with foundation stones laid for over 70 others. The projects cover education, healthcare, marketing facilities for tribal products and village infrastructure.

He highlighted initiatives in Mizoram and Arunachal Pradesh, including a museum dedicated to freedom fighter Ropuiliani and a new Tribal Research Institute building. Modi paid tribute to tribal freedom fighters and urged people to make tribal development a time-bound national priority.

PALANISWAMI ASKS VIJAY TO OPPOSE MEKEDATU DAM

CHENNAI

AIADMK general secretary Edappadi K. Palaniswami on Sunday urged Tamil Nadu Chief Minister C. Joseph Vijay to raise Karnataka's proposed Mekedatu dam project with the Congress leadership during his likely visit to New Delhi on Monday.

He also asked Vijay to press for the implementation of Supreme Court orders on the Cauvery water dispute.

In a statement, Palaniswami criticised Karnataka Chief Minister D.K. Shivakumar for repeatedly claiming that constructing a dam at Mekedatu was Karnataka's right and did not require permission from anyone. He said such remarks could create divisions between the people of Tamil Nadu and Karnataka.

Palaniswami urged Vijay to use his proposed meeting with the Congress leadership to convey Tamil Nadu's concerns over the project.

He emphasised the need to protect the State's interests in the Cauvery water-sharing dispute and ensure that the Supreme Court's directions were implemented.

The proposed Mekedatu project has remained a contentious issue between Karnataka and Tamil Nadu. Karnataka has maintained its position on constructing the dam, while Tamil Nadu has raised objections over its potential impact on the flow of Cauvery water to the State.

The issue has repeatedly triggered political disagreements between the neighbouring States, with water-sharing arrangements remaining a sensitive concern, particularly for farmers in the Cauvery delta region.

Palaniswami's appeal comes ahead of Vijay's expected Delhi visit, placing the Mekedatu dispute back in the political spotlight. He called for the State's concerns to be taken up with the Congress leadership, which has a political presence in Karnataka, to address the issue.

The Mekedatu row

- Karnataka: CM D.K. Shivakumar says the dam is its right and needs no one's permission
- Tamil Nadu: objects to its impact on the flow of Cauvery water to the State
- The ask: take it up with the Congress leadership; implement the SC's orders

Vande Bharat travels 463 km empty with faulty brakes

NEW DELHI

The South Eastern Railway (SER) zone has ordered an investigation after an empty Vande Bharat train travelled approximately 463 km with an ineffective braking system in October. The incident, which occurred during a journey from Hatia in Jharkhand to Jhansi in Uttar Pradesh, raised serious safety concerns.

The empty chair car rake was scheduled to be hauled by a goods locomotive on October 24. Its braking system was supposed to be integrated with that of the locomotive to ensure effective braking throughout the journey. However, railway staff allegedly failed to complete the integration properly.

According to an official order dated November 7, the locomotive pilot conducted a brake test after departing Hatia. During the test, he found that the train's braking power was extremely poor.

BJP targets Rahul after Italian leader's slogan

HYDERABAD

The Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) on Sunday criticised Congress leader Rahul Gandhi after Italian politician Giacomo Filibeck raised the slogan "Vote Chor, Gaddi Chhod" at the Congress Bharat Summit 2026 in Hyderabad. The slogan referred to the controversy surrounding the Special Intensive Revision (SIR) of electoral rolls.

Union Minister Kiren Rijiju took a swipe at Congress leaders in a post on X. "Have you ever seen anyone laughing when India is insulted by a foreigner? I'm not asking about which Indian goes abroad to insult India," he wrote. Gandhi and Telangana Chief Minister Revanth Reddy were seen laughing and applauding as Filibeck raised the slogan.

Filibeck, Secretary General of the Party of European Socialists, had accused the Indian government of undermining democracy and expressed support for Gandhi and the Congress. Speaking at the summit, he said international gatherings were important to highlight challenges facing Indian democracy. "Democracy is under attack in India, and we need to defend it, and the best way to defend it is to stand by Rahul Gandhi and the Indian Congress Party," he said.

Foreign interference, says BJP

BJP spokesperson Pradeep Bhandari accused Gandhi of seeking foreign interference in India's domestic affairs. He alleged that the Congress leader was relying on foreign powers to destabilise the country and seek international support against the Narendra Modi-led government.

BJP leader Shahnawaz Hussain also objected to the slogan, saying foreigners had no right to interfere in India's internal matters. He criticised the Congress for allowing such remarks.

Shiv Sena (UBT) leader Sanjay Raut defended Filibeck, arguing that democracy and human rights were legitimate subjects of international discussion. He questioned the BJP's criticism, referring to Prime Minister Modi's friendly exchanges with Italian Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni.

Satheesan calls for strict traffic rule enforcement

KOCHI

Keralam Chief Minister V.D. Satheesan on Sunday called for strict enforcement of traffic rules over the next six months to reduce road accidents. He said road safety required collective efforts and urged citizens to act responsibly.

Speaking after inaugurating the Transport Department's 'Jeeva Suyathra Mission' at Ernakulam Town Hall, Satheesan described the situation in the State as alarming. He said children, youngsters and family breadwinners were losing their lives in accidents every day. Others were seriously injured.

Satheesan said road safety was not the responsibility of the Transport Department, Police or Motor Vehicles Department alone. Every citizen had a role in preventing accidents by following traffic rules and respecting other road users.

He called for action against violations without discrimination and said elected representatives should not interfere in legal proceedings through recommendations. Drunk driving, overspeeding, mobile phone use while driving and traffic signal violations must be strictly controlled. He said there should be no compromise in imposing fines or taking action, including cancellation of driving licences wherever necessary.

He stressed that pedestrians must be given priority while crossing roads. He said road safety efforts should include ensuring road quality alongside strict enforcement. He urged Malayalis to follow traffic discipline in Keralam with the same care they show while driving abroad. Inspections over six months, he said, could help build a stronger road safety culture within a year.

> "Every citizen has a role in preventing road accidents by following traffic rules and respecting other road users."
> — V.D. Satheesan Chief Minister, Keralam

Actor Mammootty, brand ambassador of the mission, urged youngsters not to perform stunts or race vehicles on public roads. He said such activities could endanger other road users.

Transport Minister C.P. John presided over the event. Higher Education Minister Roji M. John, Hibi Eden MP and MLA T.J. Vinod attended.

CONGRESS MARCH POSTPONED

Congress postpones 'Chalo Delhi', plans statewide march

NEW DELHI

The Congress has postponed its 'Chalo Delhi' programme, scheduled for November 25 and 26, and will instead organise a 'Samvidhan Raksha March' in the capitals of all states on November 26, party sources said on Sunday. The party said the Delhi programme would be held at a later date. The change comes ahead of Constitution Day, observed on November 26.

The decision follows the INDIA bloc's November 1 rally at Delhi's Ramlila Maidan, where opposition parties protested alleged irregularities in electoral rolls and the Election Commission's Special Intensive Revision (SIR) exercise. The rally began near the Minto Road-Connaught Place junction and proceeded towards Ramlila Maidan. Opposition leaders from several parties joined the gathering.

The change of plan

WAS	NOW

'Chalo Delhi' in the capital	'Samvidhan Raksha March' in every state capital

Those present included Congress president Mallikarjun Kharge, Lok Sabha Opposition leader Rahul Gandhi, Trinamool Congress chief Mamata Banerjee, Telangana Chief Minister Revanth Reddy, RJD leader Tejashwi Yadav, National Conference president Farooq Abdullah and Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav. INDIA bloc representatives also attended, presenting a united opposition front.

Addressing the rally, Gandhi said the protest represented the voice of the country and was not linked to any one party or leader. He accused Chief Election Commissioner Gyanesh Kumar of facilitating alleged vote theft and said the Opposition would continue its campaign to protect the Constitution through peaceful and democratic means.

"Gyanesh Kumar will be removed from the post of Chief Election Commissioner. Gyanesh Kumar will go to jail," Gandhi said, alleging that the poll chief's actions had helped Prime Minister Narendra Modi and Union Home Minister Amit Shah come to power. The Congress has not announced a new date for the postponed Delhi programme. The November 26 marches are expected to take place across state capitals.

Passing Ethanol Benefits to Sugarcane Farmers: A Pathway to a Fairer FRP

BASANAGOUDA SUDI

India's rapid expansion of its ethanol-blending programme has opened a structural opportunity to improve the income security of nearly 5 crore sugarcane farmers. Ethanol blending has grown from 1.5% in 2013–14 to 12% in 2023–24, saving ₹24,300 crore in foreign exchange and reducing 120 lakh tonnes of CO_2 emissions last year alone. What began as an energy-security measure has now evolved into a stabiliser for the sugar economy.

India produces around 33 million tonnes of sugar annually, while domestic consumption is about 27 million tonnes, leaving a recurring surplus of 5–6 million tonnes. Diverting this surplus to ethanol helps mills avoid inventory pile-up, improves liquidity, and enables more timely payment of cane bills. The Centre has targeted diversion of 60 lakh tonnes of sugar into ethanol by 2025–26 — a shift with major implications for farmer incomes.

WHY ETHANOL MATTERS FOR FARMERS

Sugar mills earn significantly more when they divert cane juice or B-heavy molasses towards ethanol production. The Government has fixed ethanol procurement prices for 2024–25 at ₹49.41/litre for C-heavy molasses, ₹60.73 for B-heavy, and ₹65.60 for cane juice. As a result, mills earn 20–25% higher net realisations when they opt for ethanol routes. This improved liquidity has directly reduced farmer distress: national cane arrears fell from ₹10,000 crore (2018–19) to less than ₹3,000 crore (2023–24). States with high ethanol diversification demonstrate clear outcomes. In Maharashtra and Karnataka, cooperative mills that diverted 20–25% of cane juice to ethanol cleared 100% of their dues well before the off-season. In Uttar Pradesh, mills using the B-heavy route have paid farmers ₹330 per quintal, above the FRP of ₹315.

THIS SYSTEM HAS THREE MAJOR OUTCOMES:

- Zero cane arrears, even in low-price years
- Predictable incomes for both farmers and mills
- Long-term investment in cogeneration, biofuels, and circular-economy models (bagasse power, vinasse-based fertilisers)

The Brazilian Benchmark

Brazil offers a compelling model. Its sugar and ethanol sectors operate under a flexible production system that allows mills to switch between sugar and ethanol based on market conditions. More importantly, Brazil follows the CONSECANA revenue-sharing formula, which ensures growers receive a fixed share (around 60%) of the combined revenue from sugar and ethanol.

CAN INDIA ADOPT SUCH A MODEL?

India already has the foundation for a more integrated pricing system. The Rangarajan Committee recommended linking cane prices to sugar and by-product realisations, but its adoption has been uneven. With ethanol now forming a substantial share of mill revenue — over ₹25,000 crore in 2023–24 — the time is ripe to incorporate ethanol benefits into cane pricing. Several mechanisms can help ensure the gains of the ethanol programme flow directly to Frs.

Ethanol-linked FRP

FRP (Fair and Remunerative Price) can be calculated using a formula that averages sugar and ethanol realisations. Even a modest pass-through of ethanol profitability can raise cane prices by ₹10–₹15 per quintal without burdening mills.

A Fairer FRP for a New Sugar Economy

India's ethanol programme has matured into a pillar of both energy security and rural development. The next logical step is to institutionalise the sharing of ethanol gains with the growers who sustain the sector. Linking FRP with ethanol revenues, adopting flexible production systems, and ensuring transparent revenue-sharing can create a more resilient, equitable, and sustainable sugar economy.

If implemented well, India can replicate Brazil's achievement: stable prices, zero arrears, and rising farmer incomes — transforming sugarcane from a politically sensitive crop into a driver of green economic growth.

REVENUE-SHARING MODEL

- An adapted version of Brazil's CONSECANA can be implemented through State-level committees with farmer representation.
- Payment-linked ethanol financing
- Escrow mechanism for ethanol payments
- Oil Marketing Companies (OMCs) may route ethanol revenues through escrow accounts ensuring that farmer dues are settled before mill operational costs.
- Incentives for cane varieties suited to ethanol
- Farmers growing high-sucrose or ethanol-friendly cane varieties can be offered bonuses funded by a share of ethanol profits.
- Economic and Environmental Gains.

Zoom Expands Partnership with DEF to Boost Digital Inclusion in Karnataka

BANGALORE

Zoom Communications, Inc. (NASDAQ: ZM) on Wednesday, announced the expansion of its collaboration with the Digital Empowerment Foundation (DEF) reinforcing Zoom's commitment to digital inclusion, economic opportunity, and human connection in India. The initiative will advance access to digital skills and tools across remote and underserved districts of Karnataka.

Building on earlier collaborations in Telangana and Madhya Pradesh, this latest collaboration will support the establishment of 55 Digital Access Centers across Karnataka, designed as community-led hubs for digital connectivity, skills training, and inclusive economic participation. The centers are expected to train more than 16,500 micro-entrepreneurs and artisans and reach over 110,000 citizens, enabling them to participate more fully in the digital economy.

"Access to technology is the foundation for inclusive growth in an increasingly digital and AI-driven world, but it is human connection that turns access into opportunity," said Aparna Bawa, Chief Operating Officer, Zoom. "Through our continued collaboration with DEF, we're helping communities across India build the skills, confidence, and support they need to participate meaningfully and thrive in the digital economy, wherever they are.

Participants will use digital tools, including Zoom's AI-first open work platform, to connect with markets, access services, build digital storefronts, collaborate virtually, and grow their enterprises online.

The initiative will support 55 community-led Digital Access Centers to help build skills, enable e-commerce, and inclusive digital participation.

A key focus of the Karnataka initiative is empowering artisans and micro-entrepreneurs working within Geographical Indication (GI)-tagged industries. Through hands-on training in digital marketing, storytelling, and virtual business collaboration, these centres will enable participants to use online tools to bring region-specific crafts and products to wider markets, preserving cultural heritage while creating new income opportunities.

Founded in 2002, DEF works to bridge India's digital divide through a community-driven, hyperlocal model led by women social entrepreneurs known as SoochnaPreneurs. Equipped with digital skills and infrastructure, SoochnaPreneurs support village-level communities in accessing healthcare, education, jobs, financial services, and livelihood opportunities. With a network that has reached more than 10,000 villages and served over 35 million people, DEF continues to lead efforts connecting remote communities and advancing digital literacy and livelihoods across India.

"Our continued collaboration with Zoom is helping to bridge India's digital divide from the ground up while building a digital dividend among the most marginalized communities," said Osama Manzar, Founder & Director, Digital Empowerment Foundation. "As technology rapidly evolves, we want to ensure that no one is left behind. By combining DEF's grassroots reach with Zoom's technology and resources, we're empowering communities to connect and build sustainable livelihoods."

This initiative builds on Zoom Cares's philanthropic efforts in India, which also include collaborations with Head Held High Foundation, CyberPeace Foundation, Tata Institute of Social Sciences, Women's Collective, and Goonj. In late 2025, Zoom made a US$10 million three-year commitment to AI for Good to help build AI readiness and positive societal impact.

Together, Zoom and DEF are building inclusive, community-led pathways to digital opportunity where access to technology is paired with skills, support, and human connection. As India's digital economy continues to grow, this collaboration reflects our long-term commitment to ensuring that progress is shared and opportunity reaches those who need it.

Saudi-led coalition intercepts missiles towards Riyadh

RIYADH

The Saudi-led coalition fighting Yemen's Iran-aligned Houthis said on Sunday it had intercepted two Houthi ballistic missiles launched towards the Saudi capital Riyadh and three drones in the kingdom's oil-rich Eastern Province. The Houthis, who control most of the populous parts of Yemen, have intensified attacks on the Saudi capital in recent days. A Houthi attack last week damaged an administrative building of the state oil company Saudi Aramco in Riyadh's financial hub. The Eastern Province, the economic powerhouse of Saudi Arabia, has been subject to multiple attacks by Houthis in the past few weeks.

Guatemala decrees state of emergency

GUATEMALA CITY

Guatemalan authorities decreed a state of emergency in the eastern departments of Zacapa and Izabal, banning gatherings and boosting powers for security forces, a week after a lawmaker and three police officers were killed in an attack. The decree limits outdoor gatherings and allows security officials to disperse groups by force, as well as to make arrests and enter residences without a warrant. It is effective immediately and through the next 30 days. The announcement follows a series of armed attacks in Zacapa, including the shooting of lawmaker Julio Cesar Portillo in Rio Hondo on November 6.

Houthis take control of Bab el-Mandeb Strait

The government's retreat from Bab el-Mandeb area hands the Houthis greater leverage over the maritime chokepoint, creating a potent pressure point on global shipping.

Yemen forces withdraw from Bab el-Mandeb Strait area

- → Yemeni government forces announce withdrawal from Bab el-Mandeb area.
- → Houthis gain greater influence over strategic maritime chokepoint.
- → Southern forces redeploy towards Aden, the government base.
- → Withdrawal includes Dhubab Airport in western Taiz Governorate.
- → Developments raise concerns over global shipping and Gulf oil exports.

BAB EL-MANDEB

Yemeni forces fighting on behalf of the internationally recognised, Saudi-backed government announced on Sunday that they were withdrawing from an area overlooking the strategically important Bab el-Mandeb Strait, leaving Iran-aligned Houthi rebels in control of the territory.

The withdrawal gives the Houthis greater influence over one of the world's busiest maritime chokepoints, raising concerns about potential disruptions to international shipping and global trade.

The development comes as Iran continues to disrupt maritime traffic through the Strait of Hormuz, creating pressure on two critical shipping routes surrounding the Arabian Peninsula.

The Bab el-Mandeb Strait connects the Red Sea with the Gulf of Aden and serves as a vital passage for global shipments, particularly goods and commodities travelling between Asia and Europe through Egypt's Suez Canal. Any disruption to the route could have significant consequences for international trade and energy transportation.

The southern Yemeni forces said they were redeploying troops towards Aden, where the internationally recognised government is based. The move comes amid increasing Houthi pressure on southern territories that remain under government control.

In an official statement, the Southern Armed Forces confirmed that their redeployment involved withdrawing personnel from Dhubab Airport and the Bab el-Mandeb area in western Taiz Governorate.

The developments could further complicate the security situation in Yemen while increasing the strategic importance of the maritime corridor. With the Houthis gaining control near Bab el-Mandeb and tensions continuing around Hormuz, Gulf oil producers could face growing challenges in accessing their principal international shipping routes.

Philippines, Australia deepen defence cooperation

Philippine and Australian officials at a signing ceremony

Both countries have signed a defence arrangement aimed at simplifying military coordination and strengthening their regional security partnership.

MANILA

The Philippines and Australia signed a new defence cooperation arrangement on Sunday, further strengthening their security partnership and simplifying procedures for joint military activities between the two countries.

Philippine Defence Secretary Gilberto Teodoro said the agreement would reduce bureaucratic hurdles and streamline the implementation of the bilateral Status of Visiting Forces Agreement (SOVFA). The arrangement is expected to make military coordination more efficient by reducing the number of administrative steps required to organise joint activities.

Describing the agreement as an anti-red tape measure, Teodoro said the new framework would significantly simplify existing procedures. He explained that activities which previously required numerous administrative steps could now be completed through a much shorter process.

The defence secretary said the arrangement would also create opportunities for closer cooperation between the countries' maritime, air and land forces. Additionally, it would strengthen collaboration in humanitarian assistance and disaster response operations.

"Rather than 100 steps to do a single thing, it will just now take 10."
— Gilberto Teodoro, Philippine Defence Secretary

Teodoro said the agreement would contribute to strengthening the Philippines' credible deterrence posture, particularly amid continuing tensions in the South China Sea. The strategically important waterway remains a contested region, with several countries maintaining overlapping maritime claims.

The Philippines has increasingly expanded its network of international security partnerships while maintaining its longstanding defence alliance with the United States. Manila has repeatedly expressed concerns over what it describes as China's aggressive behaviour in the disputed waters.

The latest arrangement reflects growing defence coordination between Manila and Canberra as both countries seek to strengthen regional security cooperation. China's defence and foreign ministries did not immediately respond to requests for comment on Sunday.

MADRID

Nearly 1,500 migrants arrived in Spain's Canary Islands, marking the highest number of people rescued in a single day since 2020, as arrivals from West African countries continued to increase.

A total of 1,488 people travelling in 14 boats were rescued by the Spanish coastguard, according to maritime rescue services. The arrivals continued a surge in migration towards the Spanish archipelago that has been underway since October.

The latest figure surpassed the previous single-day record of 1,461 people rescued in waters surrounding the Canary Islands on November 7, 2020, maritime rescue services said on Sunday.

Although overall migrant arrivals in the Canary Islands have declined so far this year compared with the same period last year, the sharp increase recorded last month has placed additional pressure on reception facilities and emergency services.

The situation has particularly affected smaller and less densely populated islands, where authorities face challenges in accommodating and assisting the growing number of arrivals.

Among the boats rescued was one carrying 240 people, including 12 women and 36 children. Authorities said the migrants were brought to El Hierro, one of the smallest islands in the Canary Islands archipelago.

Most of the rescued individuals were from Senegal, Gambia and Guinea Conakry, highlighting the continuing movement of migrants from West Africa towards Spain.

Of the 14 boats recorded, 12 arrived in El Hierro, while one reached Gran Canaria and another arrived in Tenerife.

The latest arrivals underline the continuing challenges faced by Spanish authorities in managing migration across the Atlantic route, particularly as increasing numbers of people reach the smaller islands.

ASEAN reaffirms engagement with Myanmar

MANILA

Southeast Asian leaders reaffirmed the need to keep engaging with Myanmar while sticking with a plan calling for an immediate end to violence in the war-torn country, Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos Jr said on Sunday. Chairing the annual summit of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations in Manila, Marcos said the 11-member bloc agreed to pursue "constructive and principled engagement" while adhering to its five-point peace plan, ASEAN's framework for responding to the crisis in Myanmar since a 2021 coup.

The summit has come under pressure to ease a five-year ban on Myanmar's military-backed leaders attending high-level meetings, after Thailand and several other members stepped up engagement despite Myanmar's civil war.

The army-backed government wants to normalise ties with ASEAN after its leaders were barred from summits in 2021 for not de-escalating conflict in the wake of the military coup that brought them to power.

Civil war

Myanmar has been in turmoil since the military ousted Nobel Peace Prize winner Aung San Suu Kyi's elected government, triggering the civil war that the UN estimates has killed 100,000 people and displaced more than 3.5 million.

Coup leader-turned-president Min Aung Hlaing's military has received support from China, India and Russia. His administration has gained increasing international recognition in recent months, including secret talks with US officials as the Trump administration reverses years of isolation.

"No easing"

Marcos, expressing hope that ASEAN could advance the implementation of the peace plan, said leaders should ask "what more can we do for Myanmar" as the crisis continued to displace families, disrupt communities and affect the country's youth.

In addition to seeking an end to the fighting, ASEAN's Myanmar framework calls for constructive dialogue among all parties and offers the bloc's mediation and humanitarian assistance.

ASEAN's special envoy on Myanmar, Philippine Foreign Affairs Secretary Theresa Lazaro, said there would be "no easing" of ASEAN's approach toward Myanmar, although a review of the five-point plan and various proposals concerning Myanmar's participation remained under discussion and would ultimately be decided by leaders.

Cape Verde votes for president with emigration in focus

PRAIA

Cape Verde votes for president on Sunday, with incumbent José Maria Neves facing off against the West African island nation's first female candidate, a former justice minister, in a campaign focused on the need to create more jobs for young people.

Situated more than 600 km (373 miles) west of mainland Africa, the former Portuguese colony is home to only around 500,000 people, with a larger number of Cape Verdeans living overseas, mainly in the United States and Portugal.

Neves, who was prime minister for 15 years and became president in 2021, is from Cape Verde's oldest political party, the African Party for the Independence of Cape Verde (PAICV), which won 37 out of 72 seats in legislative elections in May, allowing Francisco Carvalho to become prime minister.

Analysts have tipped Neves to perform best out of the six candidates, including his main challenger Joana Rosa of the Movement for Democracy party, which had governed for 10 years prior to the legislative vote.

Under a hybrid parliamentary-presidential model, the president has veto authority and a mediating role in Cape Verde.

The archipelago, a tourism destination which hit the headlines this year when its men's soccer team reached the World Cup knockout stage and when a cruise ship off its coast was struck by hantavirus, has lost many of its young people to jobs abroad.

Neves has vowed to organise a youth summit in his second term, while Rosa has said the government should make it possible for young people to "build their futures here at home and prevent the continued exodus of young Cape Verdeans abroad".

AVIATION DISRUPTION

US flights face delays as recovery continues

WASHINGTON

Air travel across the United States is expected to take until late Sunday to return to normal schedules following a nationwide flight shutdown that disrupted thousands of journeys, the head of the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) said.

FAA Administrator Bryan Bedford said airline operations were gradually recovering and expressed confidence that schedules would largely return to normal by late Sunday. He also apologised for the widespread disruption, assuring travellers that the aviation system remained stable.

According to FlightAware, airlines cancelled more than 6,400 flights and delayed over 8,000. The disruption followed an even more difficult Friday, when approximately 9,200 flights were cancelled and 7,500 delayed.

Nationwide ground stop

The FAA had ordered a nationwide ground stop on Friday, halting nearly all departing flights for almost five hours because of disruptions to air traffic communications. The shutdown marked the longest nationwide halt to US air travel since the September 11, 2001 attacks and became one of the country's worst travel days.

The incident prompted an emergency meeting at the White House Situation Room, while federal agencies initially investigated whether a cyberattack was responsible.

"The problem was traced to the installation of at least one new router at a remote facility."
SEAN DUFFY US Transportation Secretary

However, Transportation Secretary Sean Duffy said the problem was traced to the installation of at least one new router by FAA contractor L3Harris at a remote facility. Officials described the disruption as a technical issue linked to routine maintenance.

The impact continued into Sunday, with FlightAware reporting that 875 flights scheduled for the day had already been cancelled. The aviation sector now faces the challenge of restoring normal operations and clearing the accumulated passenger backlog.

India secured a historic 3-1 ODI series victory in New Zealand, powered by disciplined bowling and crucial contributions from the middle order.

CH NEWS, MOUNT MAUNGANUI

India defeated New Zealand by 22 runs in the fifth and final ODI at Bay Oval on Sunday, securing a 3-1 series victory. The win marked India's third ODI series triumph on New Zealand soil, following their successes in 2009 and the 2018-19 season. The Indian bowlers delivered an impressive performance to defend a modest target of 210 runs.

Batting first, India struggled to build partnerships after losing Rohit Sharma for seven, Virat Kohli for five and Ruturaj Gaikwad for 18. The early dismissals left the visitors under pressure at 34 for three. Captain Shreyas Iyer scored 22, while Ishan Kishan and Axar Patel contributed 46 runs each. Naman Dhir added 31, helping India recover before New Zealand's bowlers struck again. Arshdeep Singh scored a quick 14, including two sixes, while Mohammed Siraj remained unbeaten on 14. India was eventually bowled out for 209 in 42.1 overs. Jacob Duffy and Mitchell Santner took three wickets each, while Matthew Fisher claimed two.

Chasing 210, New Zealand lost Tim Seifert for 14, while Will Young managed 22. Nick Kelly and Dean Foxcroft tried to rebuild the innings, scoring 22 and 31 respectively. However, Arshdeep Singh struck regularly, taking three wickets, including those of Kelly, Finn Allen and Kristian Clarke. Auqib Nabi and Yash Thakur also contributed with important breakthroughs, reducing New Zealand to 119 for six.

Captain Santner scored 24, while Clarke added 16, attempting to keep the chase alive. Naman Dhir dismissed Santner, while Arshdeep removed Clarke to increase the pressure. Axar Patel then dismissed Jacob Duffy and Blair Tickner, ending New Zealand's innings at 187 in 48.1 overs. Arshdeep finished with three wickets for 30 runs, while Axar and Siraj claimed two each. The victory highlighted India's bowling strength and secured another memorable ODI series success away from home.

PORTUGAL FALLS 1-4 in first post-Ronaldo match

CH NEWS, BRAGA

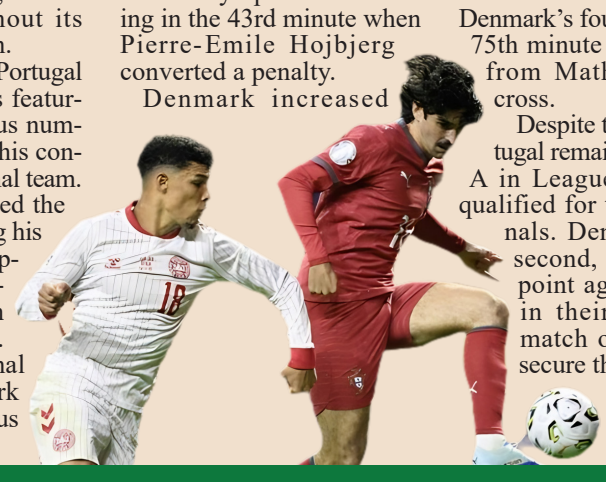

Portugal suffered a 1-4 defeat against Denmark in their UEFA Nations League encounter at Estadio Municipal on Saturday, marking their first match following Cristiano Ronaldo's international retirement. Denmark forward Rasmus Hojlund scored twice, overshadowing the emotional tribute paid to Portugal's former captain. The defeat marked a difficult beginning for the national team without its iconic number seven.

Before the match, Portugal players wore jerseys featuring Ronaldo's famous number seven to honour his contribution to the national team. Supporters also joined the celebrations, chanting his name as his image appeared on the stadium's big screen in the seventh minute. Despite the emotional atmosphere, Denmark maintained their focus and gradually took control of the contest.

Portugal started strongly, creating several opportunities through Vitinha and Pedro Neto. However, Danish goalkeeper Mads Hermansen made important saves to keep the hosts from scoring. Denmark initially thought they had taken the lead through Hojlund in the 38th minute, but the goal was disallowed following a foul in the build-up. The visitors eventually opened the scoring in the 43rd minute when Pierre-Emile Hojbjerg converted a penalty.

Denmark increased their advantage after the break, with Hojlund scoring a brilliant volley in the 50th minute following a pass from Mikkel Damsgaard. Seven minutes later, he found the net again to complete his brace. Portugal coach Jorge Jesus made three substitutions in the 63rd minute, introducing Carlos Forbs, Francisco Trincao and Joao Palhinha. However, the changes failed to turn the match around. Joachim Andersen added Denmark's fourth goal in the 75th minute with a header from Mathias Jensen's cross.

Despite the defeat, Portugal remain top of Group A in League A and have qualified for the quarter-finals. Denmark, sitting second, need just one point against Norway in their final group match on Tuesday to secure their place.

Denmark dominated the contest through Rasmus Hojlund's brace, handing Portugal a disappointing defeat as the national side began life without Ronaldo.

Indian badminton achieved its best-ever season on the BWF World Tour after Lakshya Sen won the Japan Masters title in Kumamoto on Sunday. According to the Badminton Association of India (BAI), Indian players have secured nine titles and four runner-up finishes in Super 300 and higher-level tournaments held outside the country this year. Svitolina dominated the contest from the beginning, controlling the rallies and preventing Noskova from building momentum. The victory marked her second win against the Czech player in their five career meetings. It also earned her a place in her third career final at the year-ending tournament. At 32, she became the oldest player to reach the WTA Finals final since Venus Williams achieved the feat in 2017.
