DKS EXPLORES JAPAN'S WASTE-TO-ENERGY MODEL

The visit is part of Karnataka's efforts to study and adopt internationally established models in urban planning, infrastructure and environmental management.

BENGALURU

Karnataka Chief Minister D K Shivakumar and his delegation visited the Maishima Incineration Plant in Japan's Osaka on Tuesday to study waste-to-energy technology and explore sustainable ways of managing urban waste, officials said.

Located on Maishima Island, the facility has been operational since 2001 and can process up to 900 tonnes of municipal solid waste daily through two incinerators.

The plant has an installed power generation capacity of 32 MW. It converts municipal waste into electricity, meets its own energy needs and supplies surplus power to the grid, according to a statement from the CMO. It uses advanced combustion control mechanisms, continuous emissions monitoring and pollution control systems to ensure efficient waste processing while minimising environmental impact, the statement said.

The facility is also known for its distinctive architecture, officials said. "Designed by renowned Austrian artist Friedensreich Hundertwasser, the facility features a colourful façade, unconventional architectural forms and extensive greenery. The design brings together art, ecology and industrial infrastructure, demonstrating how essential urban facilities can also serve as spaces for environmental awareness," the CMO said.

The visit is part of Karnataka's efforts to study and adopt internationally established models in urban planning, infrastructure and environmental management, officials said. The state government hopes to draw lessons from such facilities to strengthen urban infrastructure, promote scientific and efficient waste disposal, explore waste-to-energy solutions and develop cleaner, more sustainable and liveable cities, they added.

'There is so much we can learn from Japan'

Chief Minister DK Shivakumar on Tuesday praised Japan's Shinkansen bullet train network after riding it from Tokyo to Nagoya during an official visit aimed at attracting investments to Karnataka. "Japan's bullet trains have been an incredible experience. Their speed, punctuality and cleanliness are truly impressive. The trains run with remarkable precision, while the well-equipped railway stations reflect the highest standards of modern public transport. There is so much we can learn from Japan, and we must work towards bringing the best of these technologies and infrastructure to our state and our country," he wrote on his X.

CM urges ASHAs to call off stir from Japan, but workers reject appeal

Shivakumar, who is on a visit to Japan, spoke to leaders of the protesting Accredited Social Health Activists (ASHA) through a video call while travelling on a bullet train. In a post on X, he said, "Our government always stands with ASHA workers. Today, while on a visit to Japan, I spoke via video call with the office-bearers of the ASHA Workers' Association. I assured them that their demands would be discussed during the upcoming Legislative Assembly session and that, following consultations with officials from the Finance Department, an appropriate decision would be taken." He further said, "ASHA workers are like sisters to me; it is our responsibility to respond to their pain and hardships. Our government is always with them in their efforts to fulfil their legitimate demands." He urged them to call off their protest. However, the protesters rejected the Chief Minister's appeal, insisting that they would continue their agitation until he personally visited Freedom Park and issued an order addressing their demands.

BJP-SAD patch-up 6 years after breakup in poll-bound Punjab

The two parties ruled Punjab together for 15 years, from 1997 to 2002 and again from 2007 to 2017.

NEW DELHI

Shiromani Akali Dal (SAD), one of the BJP's oldest allies, on Tuesday rejoined the National Democratic Alliance (NDA) ahead of the 2027 Punjab Assembly elections, six years after the two parties parted ways over the contentious farm laws.

'Big brother' Akali Dal will have CM post: Shah

Announcing BJP's alliance with Shiromani Akali Dal for the upcoming Assembly elections in Punjab, Union Home Minister Amit Shah on Tuesday said the chief minister post will go to the SAD as it would be the "big brother" in the alliance. He said the two parties would contest all 117 seats in Punjab.

Addressing a joint presser in New Delhi, Shah welcomed the Sukhbir Singh Badal-led party back into the NDA and said Prime Minister Narendra Modi had described the development by saying that the "NDA is now complete".

Shah described the Akali Dal as the BJP's "oldest ally" and said the relationship between the two parties went back to the Atal Bihari Vajpayee-LK Advani era. "Our relationship with Akali Dal has always been strong, our ties go back to Vajpayee-Advani era," he said.

"From today onwards, the Akali Dal will work in politics as an officially recognised ally of the NDA. As the entire country is celebrating Guru Parv, it is a matter of great joy for all NDA alliance partners that the Akali Dal, one of the NDA's oldest allies, is returning to the NDA once again… Prime Minister also spoke to Sukhbir Ji and the President with great joy over the phone. He expressed the sentiment that the NDA is now complete," Shah said.

The reunion comes six years after the SAD walked out of the NDA in 2020 over the three farm laws introduced by the Centre, which had triggered widespread protests by farmers.

Tie with BJP goes beyond electoral politics: Badal

SAD president Sukhbir Singh Badal, who spoke at the meeting with Shah and Nabin on Tuesday, described the tie with the BJP as one that goes beyond electoral politics. "This is not just a political alliance. There is an emotional bond. As my late father used to say, Akali Dal-BJP is an inseparable, deeply bonded relationship," he said.

BJP-SAD REUNITE FOR 2027 BATTLE

- BJP-SAD reunion: Shiromani Akali Dal rejoined the NDA after a six-year break.
- Reason for split: SAD quit the NDA in 2020 over the Centre's three farm laws.
- 2027 elections: BJP-SAD will contest all 117 Punjab Assembly seats together.
- CM post: Amit Shah hinted that the Chief Minister's post would go to SAD, the alliance's "big brother".
- Modi's reaction: PM Narendra Modi welcomed the reunion, saying the "NDA is now complete".
- Alliance priorities: Eradicating drugs and corruption, and strengthening nationalist forces in state.
- Drug-free Punjab target: Amit Shah promised to make Punjab completely drug-free by December 31, 2029.
- Badal's message: Sukhbir Singh Badal said the BJP-SAD alliance was based on an emotional bond, not merely electoral considerations.
- Gurpurab connection: The reunion comes on Gurpurab, the same occasion on which Modi announced the repeal of the farm laws in 2021.

'Rajiv Gandhi's security was removed to 'get him killed'

NEW DELHI

Congress leader Rahul Gandhi on Tuesday said the Special Protection Guards security cover of his father Rajiv Gandhi, a former Prime Minister, was removed "so that he got killed" and the decision was "not just an accident" but "done on purpose" to create an atmosphere for the assassination.

Rajiv was assassinated by an LTTE suicide bomber on May 21, 1991 in the midst of Lok Sabha election campaign, an incident which had highlighted the security lapses as well as the decision of the VP Singh government in 1989 to withdraw SPG cover for the Congress.

Rahul's remarks came in a conversation, whose video was uploaded on social media, with his mother and former Congress president Sonia Gandhi and sister and party General Secretary Priyanka Gandhi Vadra. The trio were discussing Sonia's memoir 'Belonging: A Journey of Love', which hit the stands on November 10.

During the conversation, Sonia recalls -- as in her memoir -- the campaign in Bihar in 1991 in which Rahul had also accompanied Rajiv. Back in Delhi, she says, Rahul told her, "if we don't do something about papa's security, I know I'm going to come back for his funeral very soon."

Sonia says if you are an opposition leader visiting a state ruled by your opponent, they are not going to give special attention to security. "It was quite a horrible tour. Rahul was with his father throughout and he witnessed the rocks throwing and all the shouting and screaming at his father," she says.

Rahul remembers that the Bihar trip was the "final straw" and he was airing the concerns before also.

4 students killed as speeding truck rams school bus

LUCKNOW: At least four children were killed and 32 others, including 24 students, sustained injuries after a speeding truck rammed into a stationary school bus on the Lucknow-Agra Expressway in Uttar Pradesh's Kannauj on Tuesday morning, police said.

The accident occurred around 6 am near the Thathia area when the bus belonging to Kaushambi-based Oriental Public School was parked on the shoulder of the expressway to allow the children to use the toilet, police said.

The bus was carrying 50 people, including students returning from an excursion to the Taj Mahal, SP Vinod Kumar said. The truck hit the bus from behind, damaging its rear portion. The injured included eight school staff members. "Police personnel, Uttar Pradesh Expressways Industrial Development Authority (UPEIDA) staff and commuters passing by rescued the children from the damaged bus," he added.

KAKINADA

Seven fishermen from Uppada in Kakinada district have gone missing after the motorised fishing boat they were travelling in lost contact near Paradip Port in Odisha.

The fishermen had ventured into the sea on November 4, and there has been no communication from the boat since November 19.

Indian Navy, Coast Guard and other maritime agencies are undertaking extensive search operations to trace the fishermen, who went missing after venturing into the Bay of Bengal, officials said on Tuesday. Search operations were launched in coordination with Coast Guard officials in Kakinada, Chennai and Odisha, they added.

Chief Minister N Chandrababu Naidu spoke with officials to inquire about the missing fishing boat and the measures being taken to trace it. He directed officials to intensify search operations and provide regular updates to the families of the missing fishermen. The Kakinada District Fisheries Department also wrote to the Indian Coast Guard seeking assistance in tracing the boat.

Officials said the mobile phones of the missing fishermen and the boat's transponder were switched off. Efforts to trace the vessel through GPS have also failed. The Indian Coast Guard is conducting search operations along the Paradip coast with the help of ships and a helicopter.

TVK govt defies SC order; Karthigai Deepam not lit on Thirupparankundram stone pillar

Chennai: In a move that led to protests from opposition and devotees, the Vijay-led TVK government in Tamil Nadu defied the Supreme Court order as the annual traditional Karthigai Deepam was on Tuesday lit only at its customary Uchipillayar mandapam at Thirupparankundram, and not at the stone pillar on the hill as directed by the top court.

As the festival flame shone brightly only at the usual place around 6 pm, members of the BJP and Hindu groups gathered at Thirupparankundram, opposing not lighting the lamp at the court-directed spot.

A temple-authorised team, escorted by police, lit the lamp.

'AANEDHAMA COULD HELP ADDRESS HUMAN-ELEPHANT CONFLICT IN K'TAKA'

BENGALURU: Forest-fringe villages in Karnataka could benefit from the introduction of Aanedhama, an Elephant Soft Release Centre, to address the growing human-elephant conflict, Minister Eshwar B. Khandre has said.

He told reporters after launching 6,342 village libraries at Vikasa Soudha on Tuesday that he had proposed the project when he was previously the Forest Minister. However, the Central government had rejected it, stating that such a facility could not be allowed within a tiger reserve.

He said the problem had increased partly because some elephants were born and raised in plantations. Moving such elephants to Aanedhama and releasing them in a controlled environment could help reduce human-elephant conflict.

BASAVA BOOK ROW

The Home Dept order cited concerns over public order, communal harmony.

BENGALURU

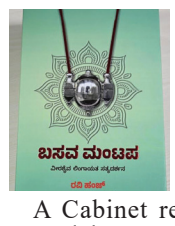

The Karnataka government has issued an order of forfeiture against the controversial book – 'Basava Mantapa' authored by NRI Ravi Hanj under section 98(1) of the Bharatiya Nagrik Suraksha Samhita.

The Home Department, in an order dated November 22, has ordered the seizure of both printed and digital copies of the book citing concerns over public order, communal harmony, and alleged derogatory remarks against 12th-century social reformer Basavanna.

The directive following the Cabinet decision on November 19, 2026, highlighted that the State police are directed to seize and forfeit both printed and digitalised copies of the book wherever found across India, and to prohibit its distribution.

The action was triggered by a series of developments following a police complaint filed by Aravind Jatti, president of Basava Samiti at the High Grounds police station, alleging the book and also the platform given to it by journalist Vishweshwar Bhat, were attempts to 'malign' Vishwaguru Basavanna, the Sharana tradition, and Lingayat identity. The representation alleged that the work portrays Basavanna as a thief and murderer, twisting historical accounts of Kalyana and the Kalyana Kranti.

The book - a compilation of the columns written by Ravi Hanj in 'Vishwavani' over the last two years, was launched on November 15. Following the complaint, an FIR was registered on November 19, 2026.

A Cabinet resolution was passed the same day and a subsequent letter from the DG & IGP (dated November 21) led to the conclusion that the publication risked hurting religious sentiments, misleading readers on historical facts, sparking protests, and disrupting public peace and harmony.

The controversy has drawn sharp reactions from community forums and political leaders. The Basava Samiti and the Akhila Bharatha Veerashaiva Lingayat Mahasabha—along with leaders across party lines, have condemned the book and staged protests in Bengaluru and other parts of Karnataka.

Hanj has maintained that his writing is grounded in historical sources and research, stating that critics reacted to short video clips rather than the full context, while also expressing regret if remarks caused hurt.

'Basava Mantapa' controversy – Key points

- Karnataka govt ordered seizure and forfeiture of Ravi Hanj's book Basava Mantapa.
- Action taken under Section 98(1) of BNSS.
- Book allegedly contains derogatory remarks about Basavanna.
- Complaint filed by Basava Samiti president Aravind Jatti.
- FIR registered on November 19, 2026.
- Govt cited threats to communal harmony and public order.
- Basava Samiti and Lingayat organisations staged protests.
- Author Ravi Hanj defended his writings as historically researched.
- Hanj approached Karnataka High Court seeking to quash the FIR.
- Controversy raises questions about freedom of expression and religious sentiments.

Court reserves order on Hanj's anticipatory bail plea

Bengaluru: The 56th City Civil and Sessions Court has reserved its order on writer Ravi Hanj's anticipatory bail plea in connection with the Basava Mantapa book controversy. Hanj approached the court on Tuesday seeking anticipatory bail after an FIR was registered over the book, raising the possibility of his arrest. After hearing arguments from both sides, the court reserved its order. Appearing for Hanj, advocate Arun Shyam argued that the articles included in the book had been published in a newspaper over a period of two years and no objections had been raised at the time.

Union Minister Shekhawat slams Congress over SIR criticism

Defends Election Commission

CH NEWS, MYSURU

Union Minister of Culture and Tourism Gajendra Singh Shekhawat launched a sharp attack on the Congress and opposition parties, accusing them of undermining constitutional institutions and refusing to accept electoral verdicts.

The 13.1 crore flagged entries

Permanently relocated	6.3 cr
Untraceable	3 cr
Deceased	2.8 cr
Duplicates	1 cr+

Figures as cited by Shekhawat

Addressing a special public awareness programme organised by the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) in Mysuru on Tuesday, he alleged that the opposition was deliberately defaming the Election Commission of India (ECI) to conceal its own political failures. He questioned what he termed the Congress party's double standards, pointing out that the party praises Electronic Voting Machines (EVMs) and the democratic process when it wins—such as in Karnataka and recent Panchayati Raj polls in Rajasthan—but alleges hacking and "vote chori" (vote theft) whenever it loses.

Union Minister Gajendra Singh Shekhawat at the 'Chintana-Mantana' programme organised by the BJP's city and rural units in Mysuru on Tuesday

Rejecting allegations against Chief Election Commissioner Gyanesh Kumar and the ECI, the Union Minister cited Congress's prolonged electoral droughts across several states, noting that the party had not won a full majority in Kerala for 70 years, Tamil Nadu for 64 years, West Bengal for 54 years, and Uttar Pradesh, Bihar, Gujarat, and Maharashtra for over 41 years. He urged the opposition to introspect on its leadership and policies rather than blaming constitutional bodies.

A major focus of his address was the ongoing controversy surrounding the Special Intensive Revision (SIR) of electoral rolls. Citing Article 324 of the Constitution and Section 21(3) of the Representation of the People Act, 1950, he asserted that the ECI is constitutionally empowered to purify voter lists. The SIR exercises were conducted repeatedly under past Congress governments in 1965–66, 1983–84, 1993, and 1995, as well as in 2002–03 under Atal Bihari Vajpayee.

Countering opposition claims that 13 crore voters were arbitrarily deleted, the Minister clarified that the 13.1 crore figure represented suspected entries flagged in draft rolls—comprising 2.8 crore deceased individuals, 3 crore untraceable entries, 6.3 crore permanently relocated voters, and over 1 crore duplicate registrations. He said the affected citizens had multiple tiers of appeal, from Booth Level Officers to the Chief Election Commission, and highlighted that 2.40 crore new voters had been added nationwide since June 2025, including 21.30 lakh first-time voters in Bihar.

Turning to recent political rhetoric, the Minister criticised opposition figures for invoking street upheavals in Bangladesh, Nepal, and Sri Lanka, and demanded that Congress leaders Rahul Gandhi and Priyanka Gandhi clarify their stance on such statements.

While affirming the constitutional right to peaceful protest, he argued that disruptive agitations in Delhi during Diwali cost the economy ₹2,000 crore and wiped out ₹200 crore in profits for small vendors. He urged the youth, who constitute 65 per cent of the country's population, to reject anarchy and focus on innovation, semiconductor manufacturing, and entrepreneurship, noting India's growth to two lakh startups and over 125 unicorns.

The event was attended by Mysuru-Kodagu MP Yaduveer Krishnadatta Chamaraja Wadiyar, MLA Srivatsa, BJP City District President Nagendra, and Rural District President Subbanna.

Agri Minister: No Constitution Day celebrations without Dr H.C. Mahadevappa

CH NEWS, MYSURU

Agriculture Minister P.M. Narendra Swamy has clarified that MLA Dr. H.C. Mahadevappa, a senior legislator of the Congress party, has not been excluded from the Constitution Day celebrations. "We are not organising the Constitution Day celebrations by leaving out Mahadevappa. He is a senior leader of our party," he said.

Participating in an interaction programme organised by the Mysuru District Journalists' Association at the Journalists' Bhavan on Tuesday, he clarified that Dr. Mahadevappa had also been invited to the Constitution Day celebrations being organised by the State Government and that invitations had been extended to everyone. "There is no confusion within our party. However, some people are creating confusion through the media," he said.

As the programme is being organised in Mysuru, former Chief Minister Siddaramaiah had convened a meeting. MP Sunil Bose had already clarified why Mahadevappa did not attend the meeting. "I am not trying to appease anyone. I am a rebel leader, and I became a Minister because of the party high command," Narendra Swamy said.

Reacting to former Minister H.D. Revanna's statement that the JD(S) would return to power in 2028, the minister said Revanna often indulged in wishful thinking and should stop dreaming.

Dr. Mahadevappa had also been invited to the Constitution Day celebrations being organised by the State Government

"The era of feudal political culture is over. In 2018, seven of us lost the Assembly elections in Mandya district, and we were dismissed as dead horses. But have we not won now?" he asked.

Stating that he had consistently fought against the JD(S) in Mandya, he said he had supported independent candidate Sumalatha Ambareesh in the 2019 Lok Sabha elections and had openly informed his party about it. "I do not know who was committed to the alliance at that time. I have always fought against the JD(S). It was because of our opposition to the JD(S) that we have come to power today."

The Minister also criticised Union Minister H.D. Kumaraswamy, alleging that he was not discussing development issues but was spending his time making personal attacks against Chief Minister D.K. Shivakumar in the media. "Kumaraswamy had promised to secure environmental clearance for the Mekedatu project from the Centre within five minutes. But he has not uttered a word about it so far," Narendra Swamy said.

'Negila Yogi' scheme provides financial assistance to farmers with under three acres

CH NEWS, MYSURU

The State Government has introduced the 'Negila Yogi' scheme to support small farmers owning less than three acres of land by providing them an annual incentive of Rs. 4,500, Agriculture Minister P.M. Narendra Swamy said.

Two schemes for farmers

- Negila Yogi: Rs. 4,500 a year for farmers with under three acres
- Pilot: two taluks in each district first
- Raitha Chaitanya: soil, crop-disease and weather alerts on farmers' phones
- Encouraged: export-oriented crops, organic and collective farming

Speaking at an interaction programme organised by the Mysuru District Journalists' Association on Tuesday, he said two taluks in each district had been selected for the pilot implementation of the scheme. "Deficiencies and difficulties encountered during implementation will be identified and addressed before extending the scheme to all districts in the coming days," he said.

The Government had also introduced the technology-driven 'Raitha Chaitanya' scheme. Information on soil fertility, crop diseases and weather conditions would be sent directly to farmers' mobile phones, enabling them to take timely preventive measures and minimise crop losses, he explained.

Short-duration crops to turn the challenge of drought into an opportunity

The Minister said the Government was giving greater encouragement to export-oriented crops, organic farming and collective farming. "From the moment I assumed charge as Agriculture Minister, I have been confronted with the challenge of drought. With a view to turning the challenge of drought into an opportunity, I have held discussions with agricultural universities and officials to encourage short-duration crops," he said.

Kanakadasa belongs to all communities: MLA T.S. Srivatsa

CH NEWS, MYSURU

Describing saint-poet Kanakadasa as a symbol of social harmony and human values, Krishnaraja MLA T.S. Srivatsa said his teachings transcend caste and community boundaries and continue to inspire society.

Despite facing several hardships during the Bhakti movement, Kanakadasa brought a new dimension to Dasa Sahitya through his progressive thinking and spirit of resistance, he said.

Recalling Kanakadasa's philanthropic outlook, Srivatsa said that the saint-poet did not use for personal benefit the treasure he is believed to have discovered while digging the land. Instead, he devoted it to public welfare activities, including helping the poor and renovating temples. Through his compositions and literary works, Kanakadasa worked to dispel ignorance among people. As a disciple of Vyasatirtha, he earned his guru's admiration, while several incidents from his life continue to remain popular in public memory, he added.

Emphasising the relevance of Kanakadasa's life and ideals, Srivatsa urged people to read his literary works and biography and imbibe his principles in their daily lives.

He appealed to the public not to restrict Kanakadasa Jayanti celebrations to ceremonial events alone, but to make the occasion meaningful by participating in the voluntary blood donation camp in large numbers.

Yuva Bharat organisation convenor Jogi Manju, BJP Mysuru City Yuva Morcha President Rakesh Gowda, former Corporator K.J. Ramesh, BJP leader Pradeep Kumar, anchor Ajay Shastry and Jayasimha Sridhar were among those present.

Drawing from his recent visits to tribal hamlets, locally known as haadis, across the state, the minister highlighted critical infrastructure gaps and directed officials to take immediate corrective action. "Our priority is to ensure that beneficiaries of these hamlets receive all government facilities and are seamlessly integrated into the mainstream of society," he emphasized.

To ensure no beneficiary is left behind, Raghumurthy instructed officials to conduct targeted surveys in the hamlets. Recognizing that Aadhaar cards and income certificates are mandatory for obtaining ration cards, he directed the administration to organize special camps to help residents secure these essential documents.

He also reviewed the progress of the KRIDL housing project, which has sanctioned 100 homes for tribal hamlets. With 15 homes completed and 85 currently under construction, the Minister assured that government funds are fully available and directed officials to expedite the remaining work.

108-YEAR-OLD GOVT SCHOOL UNDER SIEGE

Mysuru citizens rise against Railway's apartment project

People from various walks of life holding a stir against the construction of apartments by the Railways near the 108-year-old Government School in Mysuru on Tuesday.

CH NEWS, MYSURU

A 108-year-old government school in Mysuru is facing a threat to its very existence, with the South Western Railway's Mysuru Division undertaking construction of three residential apartment complexes within its premises.

Strongly opposing the project, members of the Mysuru Grahakara Parishat, in association with AIDSO and the alumni associations of Yadavagiri Government Higher Primary School and Ontikoppal Government High School, staged a protest on Tuesday, demanding an immediate halt to the construction.

A number of protesters gathered at the construction site inside the school premises and raised slogans against the Railway Department, the local MLA and the MP, accusing them of remaining indifferent to the alleged encroachment on the educational institution's land. They urged the district administration and the Department of School Education to intervene and protect the historic institution from being gradually wiped out.

A school with a glorious legacy

Established in 1918, the school has an illustrious legacy of producing several prominent personalities. Late former Chief Minister S.M. Krishna, former Chamaraja MLA Vasu, former MLC D. Made Gowda and relatives of Rashtrakavi Kuvempu are among those who studied at the institution.

Currently, around 120 students are pursuing their education here. Despite limited infrastructure, the school has consistently recorded a 100 per cent pass percentage in the SSLC examinations every year, making it an institution worth preserving.

Protesters pointed out that the Railway Department had already constructed five to six residential apartment complexes and a kalyana mantapa (marriage hall) around the school premises. Now, the demolition of a portion of the school's compound wall and the construction of three more residential complexes within the school boundary amounted to an aggressive attempt to encroach upon the institution's land.

They questioned how a department entrusted with public responsibility could undertake construction that threatens the future of a government school serving economically weaker sections.

Referring to the Karnataka Government Educational Institutions' Lands (Protection and Regularisation) Act, 2026, the protesters maintained that government school land used by an institution for at least 12 years should belong to the school.

They appealed to the Railway Department to voluntarily relinquish the disputed land in the larger interest of underprivileged students and protect the institution's historic legacy.

The protesters' demands

- → Immediately stop the construction of all three residential apartment complexes within the school premises.
- → Shift the proposed housing project to an alternative location.
- → Remove the heaps of soil, timber logs and construction materials dumped inside the school campus.
- → Take immediate steps to register the land in the name of the school through the district administration.
- → Protect the school's existing land and infrastructure from further encroachment.

The protesters warned that allowing the construction to continue would seriously compromise the school's future and deprive generations of disadvantaged children of an accessible government education facility.

A blanket of warmth for the homeless

Volunteers providing the blankets to the citizens sleeping in public places in view of the onset of the winter season in Mysuru on Tuesday.

CH NEWS, MYSURU

As winter chill and biting night winds make life increasingly difficult for the homeless, a group of compassionate volunteers in Mysuru has stepped forward to bring warmth and comfort to those forced to sleep on pavements and roadsides.

The KMPK Charitable Trust, in association with the Appaji Gowda Foundation, has launched a 45-day blanket distribution campaign to reach out to the homeless, pavement dwellers, street vendors, pourakarmikas (civic workers) who begin their work early in the morning and economically weaker sections of society. Under the initiative, volunteers will visit different parts of Mysuru every night between 11 pm and midnight to distribute blankets to people sleeping in the open, helping them protect themselves against the harsh winter conditions.

The campaign was formally launched by Appaji Gowda Foundation president Hemanth Kumar Gowda, who personally distributed blankets to homeless people sleeping in the vicinity of the City Railway Station and K.R. Hospital on Monday night.

Speaking on the occasion, Hemanth Kumar Gowda said that many homeless and underprivileged people in Mysuru were self-respecting individuals who rarely approached government agencies or voluntary organisations seeking assistance, despite their difficult circumstances. "Not everyone facing hardship comes forward to ask for help. Nor can the government alone address every social problem. Voluntary organisations and members of the public have an equally important role in making society more compassionate and inclusive," he said.

He emphasised that the initiative should not remain confined to distributing blankets. Volunteers should also make efforts to arrange health check-ups for the vulnerable people they meet during their nightly visits. "If we can reach these people with blankets and offer them protection from the cold, we should also take the next step and help them access basic healthcare. A little concern and timely intervention can make a significant difference to their lives."

KMPK Trust president Vikram Iyengar said the organisation had been consistently undertaking the winter blanket distribution drive for the past six years, with the support of friends and well-wishers. Every November and December, volunteers personally visit places where homeless people take shelter, understand their circumstances and distribute blankets to those in need. He also announced that the campaign would extend beyond Mysuru city, with volunteers planning to visit tribal hamlets (hadis) and distribute blankets to tribal families as well.

The initiative is a reminder that humanity is not always expressed through grand gestures. Sometimes, it is simply a blanket placed over a sleeping stranger on a cold night.

Social worker Jogi Manju and others participated in the programme.

Christian Forum seeks repeal of Karnataka Religious Freedom Act

Bishop of Mysore Most Rev. Dr. Francis Serrao, S.J., addressing a news conference in Mysuru on Tuesday.

CH NEWS, MYSURU

The Mysore Diocese and the United Christian Forum (UCF), Mysuru Unit, will jointly celebrate Constitution Day on November 26, highlighting the need to protect religious freedom and create awareness about constitutional rights.

Addressing a press conference in Mysuru on Tuesday, Bishop of Mysore Most Rev. Dr. Francis Serrao, S.J., said the celebrations would focus on safeguarding the constitutional rights of religious minorities, particularly the freedom of conscience and religion guaranteed under Article 25 of the Constitution. The programme will begin with a prayer at 8 am at CSI Yesu Karunalaya Church, followed by flag hoisting in the presence of religious leaders and civil society representatives and floral tributes to Dr. B.R. Ambedkar. The main programme will be held at 9 am at St. Philomena's Mahadevalaya, with the participation of more than 3,000 people representing various Christian congregations and communities.

Constitutional expert S. Murthy and Bishop Francis Serrao, President of Mysore Diocese and the United Christian Forum, will deliver messages. Patriotic songs and other programmes will also mark the occasion.

Dr. Serrao said the organisers would urge the state Government to repeal the Karnataka Protection of Rights to Religious Freedom Act, 2022, stating that its sweeping provisions and concerns over its implementation had created uncertainty among religious minorities, particularly Christians. While legal action was necessary against religious conversions carried out through force, fraud or intimidation, peaceful propagation of religion and voluntary religious choices should not be criminalised. The government would also be urged to formulate a comprehensive policy to protect religious minorities and vulnerable communities from hate speech, communal provocation, threats and violence. Existing laws must be effectively enforced, with prompt and impartial action against those responsible for such offences.

Recalling the contributions of Christian institutions to education, healthcare, social service and the welfare of the poor, the Bishop expressed the hope that an atmosphere would be created in which religious workers and evangelists could discharge their duties and services without fear.

Emphasising that Article 25 guarantees every individual the freedom of conscience and the right to profess, practise and propagate religion, he said the constitutional guarantee applied equally to all citizens, irrespective of their religious affiliation. The Constitution not only guarantees rights but also reminds citizens of their duties, including respecting religious, caste, linguistic and cultural diversity and strengthening national unity. Religion should unite people through love and humanity rather than divide them.

"Special camps to provide Aadhaar and ration cards to Tribal Hamlet Residents"

MYSURU

Minister for Scheduled Tribes Welfare and Chitradurga District In-charge T. Raghumurthy directed officials to address the shortage of basic amenities in tribal hamlets (haadis) and ensure that residents receive the benefits of various government welfare schemes.

Speaking at a meeting with officials at the Zilla Panchayat office here on Tuesday, he said that several deficiencies in basic infrastructure had come to light during his visits to tribal hamlets. Officials must take immediate steps to address these issues and ensure that tribal communities receive government benefits and become part of the mainstream.

The Minister said Aadhaar cards and income certificates were mandatory for obtaining ration cards and the officers must conduct a survey in tribal hamlets, identify residents who do not possess Aadhaar cards and income certificates, and organise special camps to provide these documents and facilitate the issuance of ration cards. He said approval had been granted to construct 100 houses in tribal hamlets through the Karnataka Rural Infrastructure Development Limited (KRIDL). Of these, 15 houses had been completed, while the remaining 85 were at various stages of construction.

Stating that there was no shortage of funds at the government level for the housing project, he instructed officials to closely monitor the work and complete the houses at the earliest.

H.D.Kote MLA Anil Chikmadu Chairman of the Karnataka Forest Development Corporation said tribal people had been relocated from forests and provided sites along forest fringes. However, they had not been issued title deeds, making it difficult for them to construct houses.

BHADRA ELEPHANT ROW: Hariprasad urges patience

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

KPCC President B.K. Hariprasad speaks to reporters in Bengaluru.

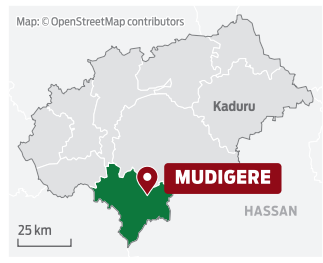

Karnataka Pradesh Congress Committee (KPCC) President B.K. Hariprasad stated that resigning in haste is not the right approach to resolving the human-elephant conflict in Chikkamagaluru, confirming that Mudigere Congress MLA Nayana Motamma's resignation move has been put on hold pending high-level talks. Speaking to reporters in Bengaluru, Hariprasad assured that once Chief Minister D.K. Shivakumar returns to the state capital, party leaders and ministers will hold a comprehensive meeting to forge a permanent solution to the crisis.

Hariprasad revealed that he had already discussed the volatile situation with Forest Minister Ramalinga Reddy and local legislators, while the Chief Minister had also personally spoken with Motamma. "I impressed upon them that instead of resigning in haste, we should all work together to resolve the issue. Consequently, the decision to resign has been set aside for now," the KPCC chief explained.

Lives lost in Malenadu

Defending Motamma's emotional outburst rather than treating it as mere political dissent, Hariprasad acknowledged that ground realities in the Malenadu region are genuinely alarming. Pointing out that nearly 20-22 residents in Chikkamagaluru district have lost their lives in wild elephant attacks, he noted that the Mudigere legislator was authentically voicing the pain, fear, and anger of her constituents. At the same time, he stressed that wildlife conservation must be balanced carefully with human safety, adding that concerned authorities have assured corrective measures so that matters do not escalate further.

The political turmoil erupted after the Forest Department initiated an operation to drive a herd of roughly 50-60 wild elephants from Belur taluk in neighboring Hassan district toward the Takkola Reserve Forest and Bhadra Wildlife Sanctuary. Strongly objecting that the drive was launched unilaterally without consulting Chikkamagaluru MLAs, Motamma had visited the Vidhana Soudha on Monday carrying a detailed resignation letter addressed to Assembly Speaker G.S. Patil, returning only because the Speaker was unavailable. Following party intervention, the immediate crisis appears defused ahead of the Chief Minister's scheduled review.

Plantation elephants need camps: Minister Khandre

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

Minister Eshwar B. Khandre

To tackle Karnataka's worsening human-elephant conflict, Minister Eshwar Khandre proposes dedicated elephant camps for plantation-born herds while awaiting the Chief Minister's high-level resolution meeting.

Karnataka Minister Eshwar B. Khandre stated that establishing dedicated 'Elephant Camps' or soft-release centers could serve as a viable long-term solution to the escalating human-elephant conflict affecting villages along the state's forest fringes. Addressing media representatives at Vikasa Soudha in Bengaluru, the Minister highlighted the urgent need to protect rural communities, coffee planters, and agricultural workers from recurring elephant intrusions across Malenadu and adjoining forest belts.

Recalling his earlier efforts to tackle the crisis, Khandre explained that he had originally conceived the proposal for a specialized elephant camp during his previous tenure as Forest Minister. However, the initiative hit a regulatory roadblock when the Central Government rejected the plan, citing statutory norms that prohibit setting up such facilities within the boundaries of a notified Tiger Reserve. Despite that earlier setback, he maintained that revisiting the concept outside restricted reserve zones remains crucial for sustainable wildlife management.

Analyzing why conflict incidents continue to intensify despite fencing and task forces, Khandre observed that the problem is significantly aggravated by a generation of wild elephants born and raised inside commercial coffee plantations rather than deep forests. Because these animals are accustomed to human settlements and plantation crops from birth, traditional scare tactics often fail to deter them. Relocating such plantation-habituated herds to structured elephant camps, he suggested, would safely remove them from human habitations while ensuring proper care and containment.

Responding to reporters' queries regarding the political controversy sparked by Mudigere MLA Nayana Motamma's resignation threat over elephant relocation disputes, Khandre struck a reassuring note. He stated that the Chief Minister is expected to return to the state capital shortly and has already indicated plans to convene a dedicated high-level meeting with legislators, forest officials, and stakeholders to hammer out a comprehensive, lasting resolution to the crisis.

JD(S) MLC Bhojegowda slams Motamma over resignation

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

Janata Dal (Secular) MLC S.L. Bhojegowda launched a sharp attack on Mudigere Congress MLA Nayana Motamma over her resignation threat regarding the relocation of wild elephants to Chikkamagaluru's Bhadra forest region, accusing her of staging political theatrics instead of pressing her own party's government for concrete solutions. Speaking to reporters at the Vidhana Soudha in Bengaluru, Bhojegowda questioned whether stepping down from office would bring any real relief to distressed farmers and villagers in Malenadu.

Mocking the ruling party legislator's stance, Bhojegowda pointed out that Motamma belongs to the party currently in power and holds direct access to the Chief Minister and the Forest Minister. "Your own party is in power, come forward, hold discussions, and speak up boldly about public issues. If you lack the strength to speak up, then go ahead and resign. But will the public good actually be served if you resign?" he asked sarcastically, urging lawmakers to stop staging dramas at the Speaker's office or attempting to frighten voters with empty threats.

Turning to the root causes of escalating human-wildlife conflict across the Western Ghats, the JD(S) leader urged the state government to adopt scientific, long-term habitat management rather than ad-hoc elephant drives. Explaining that intelligent herds enter human settlements primarily during dry months when food and water become scarce inside forests, he called for planting adequate fodder and bamboo inside reserve areas so elephants can live peacefully in their natural habitat.

BHOJEGOWDA'S PRESCRIPTION FOR MALENADU

- Railway barricades: Install them scientifically across vulnerable sanctuary boundaries, not haphazardly
- Forest food security: Ensure abundant fodder and water inside deep forest zones
- Malenadu leadership: A Forest Minister familiar with the region's hill ecology

He also demanded the comprehensive installation of sturdy railway barricades around sanctuary boundaries, insisting that forest officials properly plan and execute barrier alignments to prevent elephants from straying into villages.

Taking a swipe at the state leadership, Bhojegowda further criticized the appointment of a Forest Minister whom he claimed lacks ground-level familiarity with hilly forest regions, suggesting that someone well-versed in Malenadu's ecological realities should hold the portfolio to safeguard both residents and wildlife effectively.

Hospitality venues in Bengaluru face potential smoking ban

Karnataka's Health Department is actively considering a sweeping proposal to establish strict 'smoking-free zones' across Bengaluru, potentially prohibiting cigarette smoking inside hotels, pubs, bars, restaurants, and clubs. Modeled on stringent public health regulations enforced in global cities like London and New York, the recommendation has been formally submitted to the Health Department and the Chief Minister by an expert panel seeking to eliminate toxic second-hand smoke from shared hospitality spaces.

Addressing the proposal, Health Minister U.T. Khader stated that the government views protecting non-smokers from involuntary exposure to tobacco smoke as a pressing public health priority. He confirmed that a final policy decision will be taken shortly after holding detailed discussions with the Chief Minister.

Under existing tobacco control norms, larger eateries and bars are permitted to maintain enclosed Designated Smoking Areas (DSAs), while corporate campuses across the Information Technology and Biotechnology sectors also operate regulated smoking zones. However, public health advocates and oncologists argue that partial restrictions fail to prevent smoke from drifting into dining areas and endangering both patrons and hospitality staff. Prominent cancer specialist Dr. Vishal Rao, who has submitted technical recommendations supporting the ban, urged authorities to follow the London model by enforcing a complete prohibition inside public venues rather than allowing separate smoking rooms.

Smoking in hospitality venues

NOW	PROPOSED
Larger eateries and bars may keep enclosed smoking areas	A complete ban inside hotels, pubs, bars, restaurants and clubs

Medical experts highlight that passive smoking significantly elevates the risk of lung cancer, cardiovascular ailments, and respiratory illnesses among bystanders who never light a cigarette themselves. Alongside tighter enforcement of existing rules inside corporate tech parks, the proposed policy aims to prioritize collective community well-being over individual smoking habits in commercial establishments.

If approved by the state leadership, the measure would mark one of Bengaluru's strongest anti-tobacco interventions in recent years, reshaping nightlife and dining norms across Karnataka's capital. Hospitality owners, patrons, and public health groups now await the outcome of the upcoming deliberations between the Health Minister and the Chief Minister.

BARRICADES OVER RESIGNATIONS

Former MLA suggests barricades and sterilisation for elephants

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

M.P. Kumaraswamy

Former Mudigere MLA M.P. Kumaraswamy urged the Karnataka government to install sturdy railway barricades along forest fringes and relocate problematic wild elephants to the Bhadra Wildlife Sanctuary to bring an end to the escalating human-elephant conflict in the Malenadu region. Addressing reporters at the Vidhana Soudha in Bengaluru, the former legislator noted that residents and coffee growers across Malenadu have endured the threat of stray elephant herds for generations, with recent intrusions into estates causing severe crop destruction and widespread fear among farming families.

Outlining a comprehensive, multi-pronged action plan for permanent relief, Kumaraswamy recommended erecting physical railway-track barriers to block tuskers from entering villages and agricultural fields, alongside developing dedicated elephant corridors to allow safe wildlife movement. He also suggested scientifically controlling the growing elephant population through sterilization programs. Pointing out that the Bhadra Wildlife Sanctuary spans thousands of acres of dense forest habitat, he backed shifting rogue herds there, rhetorically asking reporters whether it would ever be practical to release wild elephants in urban centers like Bengaluru or Kolar instead.

At the same time, Kumaraswamy cautioned forest officials that merely transporting animals into the sanctuary would not solve the crisis unless strong perimeter barricades are installed around Bhadra itself. Without proper fencing along the reserve's boundaries, he warned, relocated elephants could easily wander out into neighboring villages and cause fresh distress to local farmers.

Reacting to the ongoing political drama triggered by ruling Congress legislators threatening to resign over the elephant relocation controversy, Kumaraswamy remarked that such public dissent by party MLAs has caused deep embarrassment for the Chief Minister. However, echoing other political voices, he maintained that lawmakers stepping down from office will never solve complex ecological and administrative challenges, urging the state government to focus instead on executing durable, ground-level solutions to protect Malenadu's citizens and livelihoods.

Kumaraswamy's plan

- Railway-track barriers at forest fringes
- Dedicated elephant corridors
- Sterilization to control numbers
- Barricades around Bhadra itself

Beyond uniforms: Why every student needs NCC

CH NEWS, BENGALURU

As India celebrates the 79th Raising Day of the National Cadet Corps (NCC) on November 22, 2026, the occasion calls for looking beyond crisp uniforms and ceremonial parades. Founded in 1948, the NCC serves as a vital second line of defence, quietly molding young minds into confident, disciplined, and service-minded citizens. At a time when excessive screen time, violent online games, and social isolation challenge today's youth, structured cadet training offers a powerful, real-world alternative. Through physical drills, yoga, adventure camps, and community service, students gain teamwork, courage, and practical leadership that textbooks alone cannot teach. However, limited seats currently restrict this transformative experience to a lucky few. To build stronger human capital for a developed India, policymakers should introduce NCC as an optional, credit-based subject across schools and colleges, allowing many more young people to grow into capable, responsible citizens.

BJP protests Cong govt over farmers' issues

BELDALE STATED SUGARCANE GROWERS STRUGGLE FOR FAIR PRICES DESPITE HARD WORK, URGING THE GOVERNMENT TO SERIOUSLY ADDRESS DEMANDS AND ANNOUNCE SUITABLE RATES.

CH NEWS, MANNAEKHELLI

The Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) organised a protest in Mannaekhelli village in Bidar South Assembly constituency, criticising the Congress-led Karnataka government over farmers' problems, delays in addressing sugarcane growers' demands and other public issues.

Addressing the protesters, Dr. Shailendra Beldale, BJP MLA from Bidar South, accused the state government of failing to fulfil its promises and neglecting the difficulties faced by farmers, labourers, poor families and the general public.

Beldale said sugarcane growers were struggling to secure fair prices for their produce despite investing considerable time and effort in cultivation. He urged the government to take their demands seriously and announce a suitable price for sugarcane.

He also called for measures to ensure fair prices for agricultural produce, provide essential farming facilities, maintain an adequate power supply and extend compensation to farmers who have suffered crop losses.

The MLA further raised concerns about rising prices of essential commodities and the financial burden on ordinary families. He said rural areas continued to face several basic problems that required the government's attention.

Two crop failures push Mundaragi farmers into debt

MALINGARAYA PUJAR, MUNDARAGI

Farmers in Mundaragi taluk of Gadag district are facing severe financial difficulties following two consecutive crop failures.

With little or no rainfall during the monsoon and subsequent cropping season, many families have lost their investments and are struggling to repay loans and meet their daily needs.

During the previous monsoon season, crops such as groundnut, sunflower, cowpea, cotton and other crops were damaged due to insufficient rainfall. Hoping to recover their losses, farmers cultivated maize, chickpea, wheat, sunflower, buckwheat, red chillies and onions in the next season.

However, their hopes were shattered as the crops failed to receive sufficient rainfall after sowing. Due to a lack of soil moisture, many seeds failed to germinate and rotted in the ground. The few plants that emerged also dried up in the intense heat. Farmers said their hard work and investment had brought them almost no returns.

Costs mount

Rising agricultural input costs have added to their difficulties. Farmers reportedly spent between ₹3,000 and ₹4,000 on seed packets and up to ₹2,500 per bag on fertilisers. With limited savings, many borrowed money from banks and private lenders, while some mortgaged their belongings to continue farming.

Unable to repay their loans and support their families, several farming households have reportedly migrated to cities in search of work.

The drought has also affected livestock, with shortages of drinking water and fodder. Despite their own losses, some farmers have allowed sheep and goats to graze freely in their fields rather than leave the remaining crops unused.

Farmers have urged the government and district administration to take immediate action. They have called for scientific crop damage assessments by Agriculture and Revenue Department officials and timely compensation directly into farmers' bank accounts. They have also sought the opening of cattle shelters and fodder banks to protect livestock.

The affected families say urgent government support is essential to prevent their financial difficulties from becoming worse.

WILD JUMBOS CAUGHT IN POLITICAL CROSSFIRE

When elephants become pawns in a political game

SHYAM SUNDAR VATTAM

Perhaps the wild elephants of Karnataka never imagined that their movements would trigger such a political storm, with elected representatives even threatening to quit their positions in the name of protecting people's interests.

The pachyderms, which have long been at the centre of human-elephant conflict, have now become the unlikely protagonists in a political battle within the ruling Congress party.

What began as an attempt to tackle the elephant menace in Hassan district has snowballed into a confrontation between Congress legislators, with the Forest Department caught in the crossfire.

The controversy erupted after an order was issued by the Arsikere Congress MLA and Hassan district in-charge minister, Shivalingegowda, directing forest officials to drive a herd of elephants, which had reportedly killed two people in Belur taluk, towards the Bhadra forest. The objective was to put an end to the recurring elephant attacks and provide relief to people living in the affected areas.

The proposal, however, was not received well by legislators from Chikkamagaluru district. The plan was to move all 32 elephants in the herd through Chikkamagaluru to the Bhadra forest. But the district itself has been grappling with frequent elephant incursions and human casualties. The legislators feared that shifting the herd would merely transfer the problem from Hassan to Chikkamagaluru rather than offer a lasting solution.

Mudigere MLA Nayana Motamma, Rajegowda and another legislator strongly objected to the government's move, questioning the wisdom of driving a large herd into an already conflict-prone region. Their opposition soon developed into an open political confrontation. Nayana Motamma even submitted her resignation to an official in the Speaker's office as a mark of protest.

> "Perhaps, the wild jumbos are having the last laugh at the expense of their political protectors!"
> — Shyam Sundar Vattam

However, a resignation submitted through an official cannot automatically be treated as valid. Under the prescribed procedure, an MLA is required to personally meet the Speaker and submit the resignation in the proper format for it to be considered.

While the Hassan leadership wants the elephants moved out to prevent further human casualties, Chikkamagaluru legislators are equally determined not to allow their constituency to become the next casualty of an administrative decision. Thus, a problem that demands scientific intervention and coordinated action has turned into a political tug-of-war.

The Forest Department, meanwhile, has its own set of concerns. Officials have revealed that the original herd has split into three groups, making the operation considerably more complicated. Moving a large number of elephants into unfamiliar territory is not as simple as driving cattle from one pasture to another.

Senior forest officials have also cautioned that relocating all 32 elephants to Bhadra could trigger territorial conflicts with elephants already inhabiting the forest. Such encounters could result in injuries, deaths and further disruption of the local elephant population. More importantly, there is no guarantee that the relocated elephants will remain in their new habitat. Elephants are known for their remarkable memory and ability to navigate familiar landscapes. They may eventually return to their original habitats, rendering the entire exercise futile.

The female leader of an elephant herd, in particular, plays a crucial role in guiding the group. Her experience and inherited knowledge of traditional routes, water sources and feeding grounds are vital to the herd's survival. Disrupting these social and ecological relationships through hurried relocation could create more complications than solutions.

The larger question, therefore, is whether shifting elephants from one forest division to another can ever be considered a permanent answer to the growing human-elephant conflict.

Karnataka's elephant population has reportedly crossed 7,000 and continues to grow. Culling is not a legally permissible option under India's wildlife protection framework, while transferring wild elephants to other States is neither a simple nor a practical solution. Under these circumstances, protecting and restoring elephant corridors, preventing human encroachment into traditional habitats and ensuring the availability of food and water within forests assume critical importance.

Forest Minister R. Ramalinga Reddy has openly challenged the legislators concerned to come forward with a permanent solution, assuring that his department would implement a practical proposal without delay. His statement places the responsibility squarely on the elected representatives to move beyond political posturing and work towards a sustainable solution.

Ultimately, neither Hassan nor Chikkamagaluru can claim exclusive ownership of the elephant problem. Human-elephant conflict is a larger ecological challenge that requires scientific planning, inter-district coordination and long-term habitat management.

The irony is that the elephants, which have no understanding of political boundaries or constituency limits, are now at the centre of a battle over territorial boundaries drawn by humans. While legislators argue over where the jumbos should go, the elephants may well be wondering why humans are fighting over the very forests that once belonged to them.

MAWAN-DHIYAN DI HATTI: GIVING WINGS TO THE DREAMS OF RURAL GIRLS

DR. VIJAY GARG

The real progress of society is possible only when daughters are provided with opportunities not only for education but also for becoming self-reliant. Even today, many girls in rural areas possess talent, dedication and a desire to achieve something meaningful. However, their dreams often remain unfulfilled due to a lack of proper guidance, training and resources. In such circumstances, an initiative that provides them with opportunities to learn skills and become financially independent becomes more than a source of employment; it becomes an inspiring story of social transformation.

Mawan-Dhiyan Di Hatti represents such a meaningful vision, where efforts are being made to shape the future of rural girls through a mother's affection, guidance and skills. The objective is not merely to train girls in particular activities but also to develop their confidence, self-reliance and ability to make independent decisions in life.

In Indian villages, many women possess traditional skills and household expertise. Their talents are reflected in stitching, embroidery, weaving, handicrafts, designing and other creative activities. If these skills are supported by organised training and connected with markets, they can become valuable sources of livelihood. This can help women improve their family's financial condition while establishing their own identity.

One of the most important aspects of such an initiative is that girls can learn and progress without having to leave their villages and families. In rural communities, financial limitations and social circumstances sometimes make it difficult for girls to travel elsewhere for vocational training. Having a skill-development centre within the village can therefore provide them with a valuable opportunity.

The relationship between a mother and daughter is built on love, trust and values. When a mother guides her daughters, teaches them useful skills and encourages them to become independent, this relationship becomes a powerful instrument of social change. Such initiatives convey an important message: daughters are not meant only to fulfil family responsibilities; they are equally capable of achieving their dreams and contributing meaningfully to society.

Today, self-reliance does not simply mean getting a job. Starting a small business based on one's skills, working from home, selling products online and creating employment opportunities for others are also important forms of economic independence. Digital technology has opened new doors for rural women and girls. If they receive training in digital marketing, financial literacy and entrepreneurship along with practical skills, their opportunities can expand significantly.

The government, social organisations and local communities should also encourage such initiatives. Providing market access after training, ensuring fair prices for products and recognising successful women as role models are equally important. Merely teaching a skill is not enough; opportunities must also be created to convert that skill into a respectable source of income.

Indeed, initiatives like Mawan-Dhiyan Di Hatti create hope for positive transformation in rural society. They have the potential to promote confidence along with skills, self-respect along with training, and dignity along with employment.

When daughters have skills in their hands, dreams in their eyes and confidence in their hearts, no limitation can prevent them from shaping their future. When a mother's love is combined with skills and proper guidance, daughters not only transform their own lives but also acquire the strength to change the face of society.

BIRSA MUNDA: A LIVING LEGACY AND A LEGEND WHO FOUGHT FOR LAND, IDENTITY & SELF-RULE

LALIT GARG

A great personality is not judged merely by the popularity he enjoys in his lifetime, but by how deeply he understands the pain of his people, how fearlessly he stands against injustice, and what kind of consciousness he leaves behind for generations to come. By this measure, Birsa Munda stands among the most remarkable heroes of Indian history. His life was brief, but his struggle was monumental. At barely 25 years of age, he challenged British imperialism, the exploitative zamindari and moneylending systems, social evils and cultural subjugation, awakening a powerful consciousness that elevated him beyond the status of an Adivasi leader and placed him among the foremost popular heroes of India's freedom struggle.

Birsa Munda's movement represented the assertion of tribal identity, freedom, Jal, Jungle and Zameen (water, forests and land) and spiritual faith. His struggle and his call for freedom through the Ulgulan, meaning the Great Tumult or Great Rebellion, contributed significantly to the awakening of India's freedom consciousness. He is revered as Dharti Aaba, the Father of the Earth, and Birsa Bhagwan, Birsa the Divine. His struggle was not merely a battle against the British; it was a great crusade for dignity, self-respect, identity and self-rule.

Born on 15 November 1875 in Ulihatu, Jharkhand, Birsa Munda's life reflected the story of an India that the colonial rulers viewed largely through the prism of revenue and natural resources. For an Adivasi, a forest was not merely a forest, land was not merely land, and a river was not merely a source of water. They were the foundation of his way of life, culture, faith and very existence. When British rule and the zamindari-moneylending system began undermining this way of life, rebellion was born within Birsa. This brings us to a deeper understanding of Birsa Munda's struggle. His movement was not simply a political campaign to drive the British out of India. It was much broader and more profound. It raised fundamental questions: Whose forests? Whose land? Whose rule? Whose culture? And whose rights? These questions became the very soul of his historic Ulgulan.

Birsa realised that a society can be enslaved not only by an external power but also weakened by its own internal shortcomings. Therefore, before taking up the weapon of resistance, he chose character, reform and consciousness as his first weapons. He raised his voice against superstition, addiction, social evils and regressive practices prevalent in tribal society. He encouraged people to remain conscious of their faith, culture and traditions. He inspired them to stay away from violence and intoxication, lead an ethical life and preserve their collective unity. In this sense, Birsa was not merely a revolutionary; he was also a social reformer who sought to transform society from within. He understood that a society whose self-confidence has been crushed cannot sustain resistance against external exploitation for long. Therefore, he first awakened self-respect within the tribal community and then mobilised it against colonial power.

His struggle was fundamentally about protecting the rights of farmers and tribal communities whose traditional rights had gradually been taken away by the colonial system. Moneylenders offered loans and eventually took control of land. The zamindari system institutionalised exploitation. Colonial laws were alien to the traditional tribal way of life. Birsa challenged this entire structure. For him, Swaraj did not simply mean a change of rulers. Swaraj meant the right to one's own land, the right to one's own culture, and the right to determine one's own destiny. This is precisely why Birsa's Ulgulan became such an extraordinary chapter in Indian history. Between 1895 and 1900, his influence grew rapidly. The British administration regarded his movement as a serious threat. Arrests, repression and firing followed, but the consciousness he had awakened could not be imprisoned.

The incident at Dombari Hill in January 1900 intensified the conflict. Eventually, Birsa Munda was arrested on 3 February 1900, and he died in Ranchi Jail on 9 June 1900. His death ended his physical existence, but the British failed in their attempt to erase him from history. He continued to live through folk songs, oral traditions, collective memories and the consciousness of tribal communities. That is the true victory of a great leader: the person departs, but his ideas become part of the collective consciousness of society.

And here emerges perhaps the most extraordinary dimension of Birsa Munda's personality: he did not remain merely a hero of the tribal people; he became a figure of divine reverence, 'Birsa Bhagwan'. In Jharkhand and adjoining regions, he is revered as Birsa Bhagwan and Dharti Aaba. This is not merely a matter of religious faith. It represents the profound gratitude of a community that saw in Birsa a saviour who fought for its land, culture, dignity and rights. The man who sacrificed his life to protect their identity and existence became a divine figure in their collective imagination.

The role of Prime Minister Narendra Modi in giving Birsa Munda a prominent place in India's national memory deserves special mention. Prime Minister Modi has presented Birsa not merely as a tribal hero but as a national hero of India's freedom struggle and national identity. The declaration in 2021 of 15 November as 'Janjatiya Gaurav Diwas', Tribal Pride Day, was an important milestone in this national remembrance. The nationwide programmes organised during 2024–25 to commemorate Birsa Munda's 150th birth anniversary further strengthened this process of remembrance. In 2024, the Prime Minister unveiled a commemorative coin and postage stamp at Jamui in Bihar and launched several initiatives connected with the development of tribal regions. In 2025, on the occasion of Birsa Munda's 150th birth anniversary, the Prime Minister once again paid national tribute to him at Dediapada in Gujarat, highlighting the pioneering role of tribal communities in protecting India's freedom, honour and self-respect.

The significance of bringing Birsa Munda to the centre of the national discourse goes beyond merely due recognition to a great tribal hero. It has also broadened the way Indian history is understood.

The story of India's freedom struggle can no longer be viewed merely through the lens of Delhi, Mumbai, Kolkata or other major political centres. It must also include the innumerable struggles that emerged from forests, hills and tribal regions and challenged British power. Various initiatives have also been undertaken to preserve the history and culture of tribal freedom fighters, including the establishment of museums and other institutions dedicated to tribal heritage. Birsa Munda's relevance becomes even greater today because the question of water, forests and land has once again emerged at the centre of debates on development and the environment. Birsa reminds us that development cannot mean uprooting a community from its cultural and ecological foundations. If tribal communities are to be brought into the mainstream of development, their culture, traditions, community life and traditional relationship with natural resources must also be respected. Development must not become an instrument of displacement; it must become a means of empowerment, dignity and inclusion.

Remembering Birsa Munda today does not merely mean placing flowers before his statue. It means defending the dignity of the deprived, respecting nature, raising our voice against exploitation and ensuring that those heroes who were pushed to the margins of history receive their rightful place in the national narrative. The life of Birsa Munda also teaches us that great revolutions do not always emerge from magnificent palaces or centres of power. Sometimes they rise from the narrow trails of forests, take shape in the voice of an ordinary young man, and eventually shake the foundations of an empire.

Birsa Munda's life may have been short, but his struggle became immortal. His body perished within the walls of a prison, but his idea remains free. He became Birsa Bhagwan for the tribal community because he awakened within them a power that was almost divine: the power of self-respect, dignity and freedom. Therefore, the true tribute to Birsa Munda lies not merely in remembering him as a character from the pages of history, but in understanding him as a guardian of justice, dignity, nature and human freedom. The call of Dharti Aaba still resonates today: Stay rooted in your heritage. Recognise your rights. Stand with dignity. And never bow before injustice.

Save urban lakes from encroachment

Bengaluru's remaining water bodies face severe threats from untreated sewage, garbage dumping, and buffer-zone encroachment. When drainage channels are blocked and lakebeds shrink, seasonal rains quickly trigger localized flooding while groundwater recharge drops. Protecting these ecosystems requires strict enforcement of environmental rules, timely clearance of illegal structures, and coordinated action across civic agencies. Every neighbourhood depends on healthy lakes to moderate temperatures and absorb excess runoff. Authorities must prioritize regular desilting, decentralized sewage treatment, and transparent monitoring so our water bodies can sustain future generations.

Reclaim footpaths for safe daily walking

Walkable streets are essential for safe daily commuting, yet parked vehicles, construction debris, and commercial encroachments frequently block pedestrian paths across the city. Forced onto busy carriageways, pedestrians, children, and elderly residents face constant traffic hazards. Fragmented oversight and repeated utility digging often leave pavements broken or uneven long after repairs begin. Dedicated walking space encourages shorter trips on foot and reduces reliance on private vehicles. Civic authorities should clear obstructions, enforce uniform footpath standards, and coordinate utility works before laying fresh surfaces. – Ujwala

THE SILENT BIOGRAPHERS BENEATH OUR EVERYDAY STRIDE

Before a single word is exchanged in a boardroom, a railway compartment, or a crowded café, our shoes have already introduced us. They sit quietly at the threshold of every home — scuffed, polished, battered, or pristine — holding the unspoken record of where we have been and the pace at which we move through the world. Yet, in an era obsessed with fast fashion and fleeting digital trends, we rarely pause to consider footwear as anything more than an accessory or a utilitarian necessity.

In truth, shoes are one of humanity's most intimate pieces of architecture. Designed to bear the full weight of our ambitions while shielding us from uneven pavements, monsoon puddles, and scorching asphalt, a well-crafted pair bridges the gap between vulnerability and resilience. Think of the weathered Kolhapuri chappal that softens over summers until it mirrors the exact contour of its wearer's arch, or the dependable canvas sneaker that carries a college student across campuses, late-night bus stops, and uncertain beginnings. Unlike garments that hang loosely on the body, shoes demand a truce with anatomy. They must yield without collapsing, protect without imprisoning.

Over the past decade, however, our relationship with what we wear on our feet has undergone a quiet cultural shift. The rigid hierarchy that once separated formal leather brogues from weekend athletic trainers has largely dissolved. Walk into any modern workspace today and you will find tailored trousers paired effortlessly with minimalist sneakers, signaling a generation that refuses to trade physical comfort for perceived authority. Wellness, ergonomics, and practicality have rightfully claimed center stage. We no longer accept blistered heels as the inevitable price of looking sharp.

At the same time, this democratization of footwear has come with an environmental and ethical cost. The rise of ultra-cheap, glued-together synthetic shoes — engineered to last a single season before landing in overflowing landfills — has stripped footwear of its longevity. Traditional cobblers, once fixtures on every street corner who could resole a beloved boot and extend its life by years, are increasingly sidelined by a throwaway economy. True sustainability in fashion does not begin with flashy marketing labels; it begins with repairability, honest materials, and the discipline to buy fewer, better-made pairs.

There is also a deeply personal poetry in how shoes age. A crease across the vamp tells of hurried commutes; a worn-down outer heel reveals a characteristic gait; a faint stain recalls an unexpected downpour. No two people wear down the same pair identically. In this sense, breaking in a new shoe is a collaborative act: the object shapes our posture, while our habits slowly sculpt the object.

Perhaps it is time we restored a measure of reverence to the things that carry us forward. Choosing a pair of shoes should not be an impulse driven by seasonal algorithms, nor merely a status signal stamped with a recognizable logo. Whether it is hand-stitched leather, breathable woven fabric, or cushioned running foam, the right pair grounds us — literally and metaphorically — for the miles ahead. After all, life rarely unfolds on smooth, predictable paths, and the quiet companions beneath our feet deserve far more gratitude than we give them.

— FELIX HENRY

THE QUIET ALCHEMY OF DAILY SELF-EXPRESSION

Long before a wardrobe is chosen or a greeting is spoken, the quiet ritual of applying cosmetics sets the tone for how we meet the world. Sitting neatly on bathroom shelves, tucked inside cluttered handbags, or arranged with precision on dressing tables, jars of cream, tubes of pigment, and vials of serum are often dismissed as instruments of vanity. Yet, across centuries and continents, cosmetics have functioned as something far deeper: an intimate language of identity, agency, and quiet resilience.

> "Cosmetics are no longer confined to narrow definitions of gender, age, or occasion."
> ANNA B.

From the kohl-lined eyes of ancient civilizations — worn as much to shield against the harsh glare of the sun as to accentuate the gaze — to the crushed hibiscus petals and turmeric pastes of traditional Indian households, humanity has always turned to the earth to adorn and protect the skin. Cosmetics were never merely about concealment. At their core, they represent one of our earliest intersections of science, art, and self-care. A sweep of kajal or a dab of vermilion carries centuries of cultural memory, bridging generational habits with modern interpretations of beauty.

Over the past decade, however, the philosophy behind what we put on our faces has undergone a profound transformation. The heavy, mask-like perfection once dictated by glossy magazine covers and rigid beauty standards has steadily given way to an era of intentionality. Today's consumer is less interested in erasing their features and far more invested in understanding them. Skincare has merged seamlessly with colour cosmetics: hyaluronic acid lives inside lip tints, sunscreens double as luminous primers, and breathable skin tints celebrate freckles, fine lines, and natural texture rather than hiding them beneath opaque layers.

This shift also reflects a broader democratization of beauty. Cosmetics are no longer confined to narrow definitions of gender, age, or occasion. A bold crimson lipstick can serve as quiet armour before a high-stakes presentation; a tinted moisturiser can offer a five-minute sense of normalcy on an exhausting morning; a touch of highlighter can simply be an act of playfulness on an ordinary Tuesday. In a fast-paced, unpredictable world, the five or ten minutes spent in front of a mirror often serve as a rare pocket of mindfulness — a moment where we are in complete control of the canvas.Still, the modern beauty landscape is not without its contradictions. The relentless churn of viral social media trends has fuelled overconsumption, encouraging overflowing vanities and plastic-heavy packaging that strain both wallets and the environment. True sophistication in cosmetics today lies in discernment: choosing multipurpose formulations, supporting transparent ingredient sourcing, and resisting the pressure to buy every fleeting shade promoted online. Ultimately, cosmetics derive their power not from the pigments themselves, but from the intention behind the hand that applies them.

Whether it is a minimalist swipe of lip balm or an intricate evening look, these small daily rituals remind us that taking care of our outward appearance is often a gentle way of honouring our inner selves, one brushstroke at a time.

— ANNA B.

THE QUIET CURRENCY HOLDING OUR SOCIETY TOGETHER

In an era defined by instantaneous digital transactions, algorithmic feeds, and rapid institutional shifts, one fundamental asset remains entirely immune to automation: trust. It does not appear on corporate balance sheets or national GDP reports, yet without it, every contract becomes unenforceable, every market seizes up, and every civic institution loses its legitimacy. Trust is the invisible infrastructure of human cooperation, operating quietly in the background until the precise moment it fractures.

At its core, trust is a willingness to accept vulnerability based on positive expectations of another's intentions or behaviour. When we step onto a morning train, transfer money via a mobile app, or rely on a colleague to meet a deadline, we are making a calculated leap of faith. In modern economies, this leap reduces friction. High-trust societies spend less time and capital on exhaustive verification, litigation, and surveillance, freeing up resources for innovation and growth. Conversely, when trust erodes, every interaction requires a hedge, turning routine collaboration into an exhausting exercise in risk management.

Today, however, that foundational currency is facing a quiet devaluation. Across public discourse, scepticism has increasingly replaced good faith as the default posture. Digital platforms, engineered to maximise engagement, often reward outrage and suspicion over nuance and consensus. High-profile corporate lapses, misinformation campaigns, and opaque decision-making have further trained citizens and consumers to scrutinise motives before accepting facts. While healthy scepticism protects against naivety, chronic cynicism is corrosive; it convinces people that integrity is merely a performance and that every institution is acting solely in self-interest.

Rebuilding this trust cannot be achieved through public relations campaigns or mission statements printed on office walls. Trust is strictly empirical: it is earned in drops through consistent, predictable actions and lost in buckets through a single breach of integrity. For leaders, institutions, and individuals alike, restoring credibility requires shifting from demanding trust to demonstrating trustworthiness.

This begins with radical transparency and accountability. People rarely expect perfection from leaders or organisations, but they do expect candour when things go wrong. Owning a mistake promptly, explaining the corrective steps without defensive jargon, and following through on commitments signal respect for the audience's intelligence. Consistency between private conduct and public values matters far more than polished rhetoric. When words and actions align over time, reliability ceases to be a gamble and becomes an established pattern.

Ultimately, trust is not a passive sentiment we wait to receive from others; it is a standard we set through our own conduct. Whether in boardrooms, classrooms, or neighbourhood communities, every promise kept and every honest conversation adds incremental value to our collective social capital. In a world increasingly fractured by doubt, choosing to be reliable, transparent, and fair remains the most practical investment we can make in our shared future.

NAVIGATING THE CRUCIBLE: THE HIDDEN ASSET OF PRESSURE

In the modern lexicon, "pressure" is almost exclusively a pejorative term. It is the heavy weight that sits on our chest onW a Sunday evening, the relentless tapping clock during a deadline, or the impossible expectation that crushes creativity and fuels burnout. We design our lives to minimize stress, seeking comfort, balance, and an elusive state of perpetual ease. Yet, to view pressure only through the lens of damage is to misunderstand a fundamental law of both physics and human achievement. Pressure is not merely an obstacle; it is the indispensable agent of transformation.

Without pressure, nothing remarkable is ever created. It is the deep, crushing weight of the Earth's mantle that turns ordinary carbon into a diamond. It is the intense heat and compression that welds raw metal into a durable alloy. In the biological world, the struggle against gravity is what strengthens our bones; the demand for oxygen during exertion is what expands our lung capacity. The physical universe understands that without resistance, structures remain weak and forms remain amorphous.

Human psychology operates on a similar principle. While excessive, unrelenting trauma is destructive, the Goldilocks zone of moderate pressure is the catalyst for growth. Psychologists refer to this as the Yerkes-Dodson Law, which posits that performance increases with physiological or mental arousal, up to a point. When we are operating in our comfort zone, we may feel content, but we are rarely effective. We atrophy. We drift. It is only when a demand is placed upon us — a high-stakes project, an urgent crisis, or a daunting personal goal — that our focus sharpens, our dormant creativity ignites, and we are forced to access capabilities we did not know we possessed.

The primary problem lies not in the pressure itself, but in our interpretation of it. When we perceive a challenge as a threat, our bodies release cortisol, triggering the fight-or-flight response. This narrows our vision, induces anxiety, and impairs rational thought. Conversely, when we reframe that same challenge as an opportunity for growth or mastery, the physiological response shifts. It becomes a challenge response, releasing adrenaline that energizes rather than paralyzes. The heart beats faster, not from fear, but in preparation for action.

This shift in perspective is the critical skill for thriving in the 21st century. We cannot eliminate the demands of a rapidly changing world; the economy is volatile, information is relentless, and expectations are high. Attempting to retreat from these realities often leads to deeper isolation and fragility. Instead, we must learn to embrace the crucible. We must stop seeking an easy life and start developing the capacity for a strong one.

This does not mean glorifying burnout or dismissing the vital need for rest and recovery. Rest is the necessary counterpart to exertion, the moment when the diamond hardens and the muscle repairs. It means engaging with pressure intentionally, using it as a diagnostic tool to see where we need to improve, and trusting our capacity to adapt.

Ultimately, pressure is the fire that tempers the soul. By accepting its inevitability and reframing its purpose, we can transform it from a force that breaks us into the force that builds us.

MORE THAN FIRE: THE LIGHTER AS A HUMBLE ICON

It sits quietly in a pocket, a glove compartment, or a junk drawer, often unnoticed until absolute necessity demands its service. It is rarely considered an object of significant design or cultural weight, yet the lighter is one of humanity's most profound technological achievements. Before the era of micro-processing and digital dependency, the ability to instantly conjure a controlled flame was nothing short of alchemy. The evolution of the lighter is a quiet mirror to our own progress, charting a path from primitive utility to sophisticated design and personal style.

In its most basic form, the lighter is a tool of liberation from the tyranny of friction. The struggle of ancient peoples laboriously rubbing sticks or striking flint against steel was a testament to the preciousness of fire for warmth, cooking, and safety. When the first practical, mass-produced lighters emerged in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, they didn't just provide a spark; they offered convenience and reliability that fundamentally altered daily life.

It was no longer necessary to carry sulfur-tipped matches that could be rendered useless by a sudden gust of wind or a drop of rain.

The 20th century, however, transformed the lighter from a mere utility into an emblem of personality and status. Think of the iconic click of a Zippo, a sound instantly recognizable across generations. It was not just a way to light a cigarette (a ubiquitous activity in its heyday); it was a prop in a film noir, a signifier of rugged American dependability, and often a personalized canvas. The lighter became jewelry, a corporate gift, and a travel souvenir. It was an artifact of an analog age that people carried close to their bodies.

Even as smoking rates have declined in many parts of the world, the lighter's relevance has persisted. Its function has broadened, becoming essential for lighting candles in moments of celebration or reflection, igniting pilot lights on stoves in older homes, or powering backpacking stoves that feed hikers on remote mountain trails. The design has evolved, too, moving from heavy, refillable metal cases to sleek, refillable butane torches and the omnipresent, brightly colored disposable plastic lighters that represent peak utilitarianism: ubiquitous, cheap, and undeniably effective.

Yet, this democratization also highlights a contemporary tension. While a high-end, windproof lighter is designed to last a lifetime, serving as a cherished object, the disposable lighter is a hallmark of our throwaway culture. Billions of these plastic lighters are manufactured and discarded annually, ending up in landfills or as environmental litter. This contrast between the enduring, valuable object and the cheap, disposable convenience speaks to a broader ethical conversation about consumption and sustainability.

Ultimately, the lighter remains a powerful symbol. It represents humanity's mastery over one of the fundamental forces of nature, condensed into a pocket-sized artifact. Whether it is an heirloom Zippo passed down through a family or a simple plastic Bic purchased at a gas station, every lighter holds a latent promise. In a world increasingly defined by digital abstraction and remote connection, the simple act of generating a real, tangible flame provides a primal and grounding link to our past, reminding us that sometimes, the most essential tool is the one that simply holds the power to spark.

Leaders demand action in TVK MLA harassment case

CHENNAI

Political leaders in Tamil Nadu have demanded action over allegations that a TVK MLA sent inappropriate WhatsApp messages to a woman district collector. DMK MP Kanimozhi Karunanidhi questioned the state government's response, asking why Chief Minister Joseph Vijay and his ministers had remained silent until the National Commission for Women (NCW) and the court intervened.

Kanimozhi alleged that authorities had failed to act despite the issue being raised earlier. She questioned how a woman district collector could face difficulties in registering a complaint and called for the court to monitor the investigation. "Justice has to be done, and the court should monitor this," she said. She also said the matter would be raised in Parliament.

AIADMK General Secretary Edappadi K Palaniswami demanded the immediate arrest of the Kallakurichi TVK MLA, Arul Vignesh, and sought a Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) probe. He alleged that attempts had been made to suppress the complaint and criticised the government's handling of the issue.

SINGLE BATCH DISPUTE

Bisleri welcomes FSSAI clarification on Goa water sample

NEW DELHI

Bisleri International on Tuesday welcomed the Food Safety and Standards Authority of India's (FSSAI) clarification that the sale prohibition on its packaged drinking water applies only to a single batch manufactured at its Goa plant on September 27, 2025.

Bisleri packaged drinking water

The batch, identified as GO 270, was the subject of a sample collected from the company's facility in Verna, South Goa. Bisleri said the regulator clarified on November 23 that bromates were found below the permissible limit during the re-testing of the sample. The company added that no stocks from the particular batch were currently available in the market.

> "The FSSAI has categorically and conclusively clarified on 23rd November 2026 that bromates were found below the permissible limit on re-testing of the above batch sample."
> — Bisleri International

Bisleri stated that it produces more than 50,000 batches annually and that all its 143 plants remain operational and comply with FSSAI regulations. It also said the Goa facility had not received any direction to suspend operations and that samples from subsequent production met the prescribed standards.

Explaining the testing process, the company said six samples from the same water source were initially collected, and all cleared the prescribed parameters. However, during subsequent testing, one sample from batch GO 270 reported polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs) at 0.144 micrograms per litre, while another sample from the same batch cleared all parameters. Bisleri said it had raised concerns over the discrepancies and requested a re-test in February 2026.

The FSSAI clarified that only one sample from one batch was found non-compliant and issued a sale prohibition order under Section 36(3) of the Food Safety and Standards Act. The regulator also directed the company to conduct a root cause analysis.

Chief Minister V D Satheesan announced the provision, stating that the law aims to protect senior citizens from abandonment and ensure their well-being.

The legislation, passed in October, will come into force after receiving the Governor's assent. Speaking after inaugurating a ₹20-crore residential facility for elderly men, named Pithrumandiram, at Gandhi Bhavan in Pathanapuram, Satheesan said the provision was deliberately included to discourage children from abandoning their parents after taking possession of their property.

"You all should not be worried. I have deliberately added a provision in the legislation which mandates a three-year jail term for those children who neglect their parents after acquiring all their property," the Chief Minister said.

He added that children found neglecting their parents after acquiring their property would face imprisonment once the legislation receives the Governor's approval.

Satheesan said the government's first decision after coming to power was to establish a separate department for senior citizens, which he described as the first of its kind in the country.

Wayanad will become India's first e-waste-free district on November 27, following three months of coordinated waste collection and safe disposal efforts.

KALPETTA

Wayanad in Kerala is set to become India's first completely e-waste-free district on November 27, marking a major step towards sustainable waste management. Agriculture Minister T Siddique announced the development on Tuesday, stating that Chief Minister VD Satheesan would formally declare the district e-waste-free at a function in Kalpetta.

The declaration ceremony will take place at Chandragiri Auditorium in the presence of Local Self-Government Minister KM Shaji, elected representatives and government officials. The achievement follows three months of coordinated efforts to collect electronic waste from different parts of the district and ensure its safe disposal.

According to Siddique, the campaign covered households, government offices, educational institutions, tourist destinations and public establishments. Discarded electronic items were collected from these locations and sent for safe disposal as part of the district-wide initiative. The coordinated effort aimed to address the growing challenge of electronic waste and improve its management through organised collection and disposal.

Electronic waste, commonly known as e-waste, includes discarded electronic devices and equipment. Improper disposal of such waste can create environmental concerns, making systematic collection and safe processing important for communities. Wayanad's initiative focuses on ensuring that electronic waste generated across different establishments is handled responsibly.

Following the formal declaration, the district will begin a campaign to become plastic-free and more environment-friendly. Carbon neutrality has also been identified as the next major target.

EU seeks maritime security cooperation with India

NEW DELHI

The flags of the European Union and India.

The European Union (EU) has called for stronger regional cooperation with India and other Indian Ocean Rim Association (IORA) partners to protect sea lanes and tackle maritime crime. EU Ambassador Jean-Eric Paquet said the security of Indian Ocean shipping routes was a direct concern for Europe.

Speaking at the EU-IORA roundtable on maritime security, Paquet said both organisations had identified maritime security as a priority. He stressed the need for information-sharing and coordinated action against piracy and trafficking in drugs, arms and people.

The roundtable was organised by the EU with support from its ESIWA+ project, ahead of the IORA Committee of Senior Officials Meeting. Representatives from India, Australia, Sri Lanka, Kenya and Saudi Arabia attended.

Participants also received an update on EU Naval Force Operation Atalanta, which operates in the western Indian Ocean and Red Sea. Vice Admiral Ignacio Villanueva Serrano, its commander, outlined its role in deterring piracy, protecting World Food Programme vessels, safeguarding submarine infrastructure and monitoring the "shadow fleet". He said the visit marked progress in cooperation with the Indian Navy, with both sides set to sign a common operational framework.

The EU became an IORA dialogue partner in 2023. Maritime crime is one of four focus areas of IORA's maritime safety and security working group, chaired by Australia, with India as coordinating country.

India and the EU signed a Security and Defence Partnership in January covering maritime security, defence technology, cyber threats, space and counter-terrorism.

CJP questions Centre as co-convenor Saurav Das is stopped from flying to UK

Cockroach Janta Party leaders.

MUMBAI

Cockroach Janta Party (CJP) founder Abhijeet Dipke on Tuesday questioned the central government over co-convenor Saurav Das being stopped from travelling to the United Kingdom, alleging an attempt to silence voices of dissent. Das was reportedly prevented from boarding his flight to London despite invitations from Oxford University and the London School of Economics (LSE) to deliver lectures on the Cockroach Movement.

Das was stopped by airport security at Delhi's Indira Gandhi International Airport on Monday after arriving on Sunday night for his scheduled journey. He was reportedly informed that he was not permitted to leave the country. Das later shared a video of the incident on social media.

Speaking to the media in Chhatrapati Sambhajinagar, Dipke questioned the reasons behind the restriction and asked why an Indian citizen was being prevented from addressing international academic institutions. He said Das had been invited to explain how the movement gained recognition through peaceful protest.

The Cockroach Movement gained prominence after demanding the resignation of Union Education Minister Dharmendra Pradhan over alleged examination irregularities and the NEET-UG paper leak controversy. Pradhan resigned on July 25, stating that he wanted to prioritise students' futures and careers.

Drawing comparisons with businessmen Vijay Mallya, Nirav Modi and Mehul Choksi, Dipke questioned what he called the government's selective approach.

Centre updates 'Made in India' rules for IT hardware

NEW DELHI

8%	10%	6
of local content can come from in-house R&D in India	more for Indian design and IP	months before the rules take effect

The Centre has revised its 'Made in India' criteria for IT hardware products, giving greater importance to domestic research, design and semiconductor-level manufacturing rather than focusing mainly on final assembly.

The Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology (MeitY) issued the notification on November 20, covering desktops, all-in-one computers, laptops, thin clients, servers, computer monitors and interactive flat panel displays (IFPDs). The new framework will come into effect after six months and will apply to central government purchases as well as state and local body procurement under centrally funded schemes.

Under the revised rules, different manufacturing stages will receive specific weightage based on their contribution to a product's bill of materials. Certain activities, including motherboard assembly and final assembly and testing, must take place in India. Desktop monitor assembly and IFPD display glass assembly are also compulsory for eligibility in government contracts.

Credit for Indian design

The framework introduces incentives for research and intellectual property developed domestically. In-house research and development conducted in India can contribute 8 per cent of local content, while Indian-designed products and intellectual property can receive an additional 10 per cent.

Chips and storage

The government has also introduced incentives for semiconductor-related activities. Memory and solid-state storage assembled on circuit boards in India receive additional weightage, which increases when chips undergo assembly, testing and packaging domestically.

The revised methodology is aligned with the production-linked incentive scheme for IT hardware. The government said the changes aim to promote domestic manufacturing, strengthen indigenous capabilities and generate employment.

NEW DELHI

India and China have concluded a second round of Corps Commander-level military talks aimed at easing tensions along the Line of Actual Control (LAC) in Arunachal Pradesh. The discussions, held over nearly 10 days from November 8, focused on preventing local confrontations from escalating into larger military standoffs ahead of winter.

The talks were described as cordial by defence sources. The Indian delegation was led by Lieutenant General Girish Kalia, General Officer Commanding of the Army's III Corps, also known as the Spear Corps.

Discussions covered troop engagement practices, maintaining communication channels and preventing misunderstandings between personnel deployed along the frontier.

The latest round follows senior military commander-level meetings held on September 6 at Wacha in India and September 7 at Damai in China. The meetings followed understandings reached between the two countries' Special Representatives in August 2025 and August 2026, alongside discussions under the Working Mechanism for Consultation and Coordination on India-China Border Affairs.

DEEPATHOON LAMP CONTROVERSY

Protest erupts in TN over Karthigai Deepam dispute

THIRUPARANKUNDRAM

A scuffle broke out between police and protesters in Tamil Nadu's Thiruparankundram on Tuesday after the Karthigai Deepam ceremonial lamp was lit at the usual location instead of at the disputed Deepathoon stone pillar, where the Supreme Court had permitted it. Hindu organisations and Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) leaders staged protests, demanding implementation of the court's direction.

The lamp was lit atop the Arulmigu Uchipillayar Temple rather than at Deepathoon, located on Thiruparankundram hill. The Supreme Court had allowed the lamp to be lit at the stone pillar as a one-time arrangement last week. However, it clarified that the permission would not establish any customary right to conduct the ritual there in subsequent years.

The decision to light the lamp at the usual location triggered objections from Hindu organisations, which demanded that authorities follow the Supreme Court's direction.

Tamil Nadu BJP leader Vinoj P Selvam criticised the government led by Chief Minister Joseph Vijay, accusing it of failing to respect devotees' sentiments.

? THE COURT'S ORDER

The Supreme Court allowed the lamp at the Deepathoon as a one-time arrangement, with no customary right in later years.

Earlier on Tuesday, Tamil Nadu BJP president Nainar Nagendran was briefly detained while travelling to visit the Thiruparankundram Murugan Temple. He alleged that police prevented him from offering prayers despite the absence of a legally valid prohibitory order.

Delhi BS-VI vehicle rule: CTI flags impact on trade

NEW DELHI

The Chamber of Trade and Industry (CTI) on Tuesday expressed concern over the suggestion to allow only BS-VI compliant vehicles to enter Delhi and gradually ban the entry of commercial vehicles, warning that the move could severely affect the national Capital's trade and industrial sector as well as consumers.

CTI Chairman Brijesh Goyal said controlling pollution was essential, but implementing such restrictions without adequate preparations would directly affect more than 2 million traders, entrepreneurs, transporters and consumers in Delhi. Including their family members, the livelihoods of more than 5 million people could be impacted, he said.

"If commercial vehicles are not allowed into Delhi, the city's trade will come to a standstill," he said. Highlighting seven major concerns, CTI said transportation costs could increase two to three times if goods were required to be unloaded at border warehouses and subsequently transported into the city through smaller electric vehicles.

India takes skilling journey to global stage

India is preparing to host WorldSkills Asia 2027 as the government expands vocational training, upgrades ITIs and strengthens industry partnerships to equip young people for emerging employment opportunities.

NEW DELHI

Prime Minister Narendra Modi on Tuesday highlighted India's growing focus on skill development, stressing the need to make skilling a preferred career pathway as the country prepares to host WorldSkills Asia 2027.

The Prime Minister's Office, in a post on X, said India was taking its skilling journey to the world stage. It referred to an article by Union Minister of State for Skill Development and Entrepreneurship Jayant Chaudhary, which highlighted preparations for the international competition, the PM-SETU initiative and efforts to strengthen industry-linked training.

The article noted that India had sent its first-ever contingent to WorldSkills Asia just a year ago. Now, hosting a WorldSkills event for the first time marks a significant development for the country's vocational training ecosystem.

Chaudhary highlighted that although Indian civilisation has traditionally celebrated skilled craftsmanship, vocational education continues to remain a secondary choice for many families, with conventional degree programmes often preferred over technical qualifications.

The growing adoption of artificial intelligence is also changing employment requirements. According to ADP's People at Work 2026 study, 80 per cent of employees in India use AI several times a week, while 41 per cent use it nearly every day.

The article also cited World Economic Forum projections that 170 million new jobs could be created and 92 million existing jobs displaced by 2030, with 59 out of every 100 workers requiring training.

To strengthen India's training infrastructure, the government launched PM-SETU with an outlay of Rs 60,000 crore to upgrade 1,000 Industrial Training Institutes. Investment plans for 15 clusters involving anchor industry partners have also been approved.

The initiative aims to connect training institutions with employers and prepare young people for emerging opportunities across industries, including those supporting AI infrastructure.

DRDO showcases indigenous chip technologies

NEW DELHI

India is strengthening its semiconductor and advanced technology capabilities, with the Defence Research and Development Organisation (DRDO) showcasing indigenous innovations aimed at bringing research closer to industrial application and enhancing defence preparedness.

The initiative covers semiconductor development, artificial intelligence, quantum computing and advanced defence technologies, reflecting the growing importance of domestic technological capabilities for national security and self-reliance.

At the Emerging Science, Technology and Innovation Conclave (ESTIC) 2026, held at Bharat Mandapam in New Delhi from October 27 to 29, DRDO led a dedicated session on semiconductors and next-generation chips.

Among the major technologies showcased were Gallium Arsenide (GaAs) and Gallium Nitride (GaN)-based Monolithic Microwave Integrated Circuits (MMICs), Multi-Chip Modules and Infrared Focal Plane Arrays (IRFPAs), developed by DRDO's Solid State Physics Laboratory in Delhi.

These components are designed for applications in advanced radar systems, electronic warfare and missile technology. MMICs are used in high-frequency and high-power electronic systems, while infrared focal plane arrays help tactical missiles detect and track targets during their terminal flight phase.

DRDO also displayed Short-Wave, Mid-Wave and Long-Wave Infrared technologies, demonstrating developments in domestic infrared sensing and defence electronics.

Advanced communication systems, quantum technology prototypes, energy management systems and protective equipment for military personnel were also showcased.

Real estate sentiment turns optimistic in July-Sep

MUMBAI

There has been a broad-based recovery in confidence across India's real estate sector, as the 'Current Sentiment Score' in the July-September period rebounded to 56 from 48 in the previous quarter, moving back into optimistic territory after two consecutive quarters below the neutral threshold, a report showed on Tuesday.

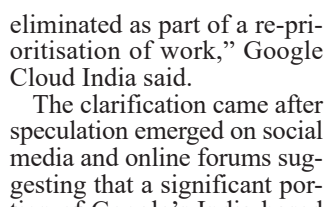

The 'Future Sentiment Score' also strengthened to 58 from 50, indicating that stakeholders are increasingly positive about the sector's prospects over the next six months, according to the 50th edition of the Knight Frank–NAREDCO Real Estate Sentiment Index for Q3 2026.

"Developer sentiment is back at year-ago levels, and the share of respondents expecting stronger residential launches has doubled to 42 per cent. With construction and borrowing costs rising, the industry's priority must be disciplined, demand-aligned supply, supported by timely approvals and sustained investment in infrastructure," said Parveen Jain, National President, NAREDCO.

The improvement reflects the resilience of India's domestic growth engine, stronger expectations across residential and office markets, and renewed confidence among both developers and non-developer stakeholders, said the report.

"India's strong domestic growth, improving expectations across real estate segments and sustained demand for quality office assets are supporting this renewed confidence. At the same time, higher energy prices, inflation and tighter monetary conditions warrant continued vigilance. The sector's ability to align supply with demand and maintain execution discipline will be critical to sustaining this momentum," added Shishir Baijal, International Partner, Chairman and Managing Director, Knight Frank India.

Developer sentiment rose to 59 in Q3 2026 from 51 in Q2 2026, returning to the level recorded a year earlier. Non-developer sentiment, which includes banks, financial institutions, private equity funds and other industry stakeholders, also improved to 58 from 53 in the previous quarter.

Hyundai to raise prices by up to Rs 8,000 from Dec 1

NEW DELHI

Hyundai Motor India Limited on Tuesday announced a price increase of up to Rs 8,000 across select models and variants in its vehicle portfolio, effective December 1, 2026, citing rising input costs. The company said the extent of the increase will vary depending on the model and trim, with the maximum hike capped at Rs 8,000.

The decision comes as the automaker faces a sharp rise in input costs, which has put pressure on its operating expenses.

"The company has planned a minor price increase effective December 1, 2026 across select models and trims of its vehicle lineup," it said.

"The extent of the price increase will vary depending on the model and trim and shall be up to a maximum of INR 8,000," it added.

In a regulatory filing, Hyundai Motor India said it had been absorbing a significant portion of the increased costs through various internal efficiency measures and cost optimisation initiatives.

However, the company noted that it has now become necessary to pass on a part of the cost burden to customers.

"The decision has been necessitated primarily on account of the steep increase in input costs," the carmaker noted.

"While the company has consistently absorbed a substantial part of the rising costs through internal efficiencies and cost optimisation measures, it has become necessary to pass on a limited portion of the increased costs to customers," it added.

The revised prices will take effect from December 1, 2026. Hyundai joins a growing list of automobile manufacturers that have raised vehicle prices in response to higher commodity and input costs.

Google Cloud denies large-scale layoffs in India

NEW DELHI

Google Cloud, the US-based cloud computing division of Alphabet, on Tuesday denied reports of large-scale layoffs in its business in India, saying recent workforce changes were limited to a small organisational restructuring that affected around 30 roles.

In a statement posted on social media platform X, Google Cloud India described reports of widespread job cuts as totally inaccurate and said the company had only undertaken a limited realignment of work priorities.

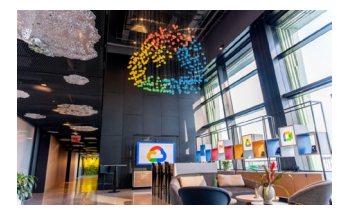

"These rumours are totally inaccurate. Last week, Google Cloud made a small organisational change in India, and approximately 30 roles were eliminated as part of a re-prioritisation of work," Google Cloud India said.

The clarification came after speculation emerged on social media and online forums suggesting that a significant portion of Google's India-based cloud workforce had been impacted by layoffs.

The discussion was reportedly triggered by posts on a professional networking platform, where an individual claiming to be a Bengaluru-based employee alleged that staff were being asked to resign or risk termination.

The posts also referred to alleged restrictions on internal transfers and the possibility of further workforce reductions.

Google's statement sought to counter those claims, emphasising that the changes were limited in scale and part of a routine business reorganisation.

Separately, reports claimed Qualcomm started laying off employees in India as part of a broader global workforce restructuring programme earlier in November. This was expected to affect around 1,000 employees, or up to 6 per cent of the company's workforce in the country, the reports said.

INDIA-EU ECONOMIC TIES

India-EU trade deal expected by year-end

NEW DELHI

The proposed India-European Union (EU) Free Trade Agreement (FTA) is likely to be concluded by the end of this year, with expectations of strengthening commercial relations and opening new investment opportunities, Lower Saxony Minister-President Olaf Lies said.

Speaking to IANS, Lies expressed confidence that the agreement would provide fresh momentum to India-EU economic cooperation and strengthen business connections between Indian companies and those in Lower Saxony, a German state.

He said the agreement would make direct engagement between companies from India and Lower Saxony increasingly important, particularly in areas involving investments, free trade and the exchange of components.

Highlighting renewable energy cooperation, the minister-president described India as an important partner for Germany in the sector.

Lies also pointed to growing interest among businesses on both sides, indicating scope for deeper economic engagement and mutually beneficial investments.

The trade negotiations are part of broader efforts to strengthen the India-EU strategic partnership. Earlier in November, India and the European Union held the seventh India-EU Strategic Partnership Review Meeting in New Delhi.

> "On the commercial front, I see companies from Germany looking to invest in India, as well as Indian companies interested in investing in Lower Saxony."
> — Olaf Lies, Minister-President of Lower Saxony

The meeting reviewed various aspects of bilateral cooperation, including trade and investment under the proposed FTA.

According to the Ministry of External Affairs, Secretary (West) Sibi George co-chaired the meeting with Matti Maasikas, Deputy Secretary-General for Geoeconomics and Interinstitutional Issues of the European Union.

The two sides also reviewed progress in implementing the Joint Comprehensive Strategic Agenda, adopted at the India-EU Summit in January this year.

Israel says strike killed Hamas security chief

Israel's military and domestic security agency said an airstrike in Gaza killed the head of Hamas's internal security apparatus.

TEL AVIV

The Israel Defense Forces and the Israel Security Agency said in a joint statement on Tuesday that the strike killed Naim Muhammad Ashour Abu Nahal. They described him as a senior Hamas official who had served as deputy head of its internal security apparatus and led its Northern District.

The agencies said Abu Nahal took charge of the apparatus about two months ago, after Israeli forces captured his predecessor. Israeli caretaker Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu confirmed the strike in a post on X and praised the military and the security agency, also known as Shin Bet. Netanyahu said the predecessor had been captured three months ago. He said the strike was part of his government's policy.

The agencies accused Abu Nahal of helping plan attacks against Israeli troops and civilians during the war and working to rebuild the capabilities of armed groups in Gaza. They also alleged that he repeatedly violated the ceasefire. They said the strike was intended to remove what they described as a threat.

The agencies said Israeli troops remained deployed in the area under the ceasefire agreement and would continue to act against what they considered immediate threats.

The target

- Role: Deputy head of Hamas's internal security apparatus
- Region: Led its Northern District
- Took charge: About two months ago, after his predecessor was captured
- Accused of: Helping plan attacks and rebuild armed groups in Gaza

Israeli agencies' account

The agencies said they took steps to reduce harm to civilians, including aerial surveillance and the use of precision munitions. They described Abu Nahal's death as a blow to Hamas's ability to manage its operations. They said the strike followed other Israeli operations targeting senior officials in Hamas's security bodies, including its General Security Service and police.

Leak details Russian war deaths, suicides

Leaked Russian records link more than 460,000 deaths to the Ukraine war and document over 1,000 suicides among Russian troops.

MOSCOW

The Guardian identified more than 460,000 deaths linked to Russia's war in Ukraine from the start of the full-scale invasion in February 2022 through September 2026. Its analysis drew on leaked records compiled by Rosstat, Russia's state statistics agency, from civil registry offices across the country.

A separate Guardian report based on the records found that more than 1,000 Russian soldiers were recorded as having died by suicide. The newspaper found cases that did not appear in the suicide tally, including one in which officials had told a soldier's family he had died by suicide.

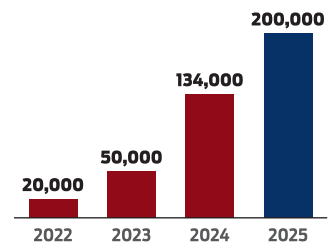

Russia last reported an official military death toll in September 2022, when it said 5,937 servicemen had been killed. The leaked records cover a much longer period. The Guardian said the records also leave out some deaths that were never registered and soldiers who remain missing.

A separate analysis by Meduza and Mediazona estimated that more than 700,000 Russian troops had died by the end of September 2026.

Russia has offered cash bonuses to attract recruits, according to the reporting. It has also recruited among migrant workers in Russia and sought recruits abroad by offering citizenship or civilian jobs.

US Patriot missile transfer to Ukraine awaits approval

WASHINGTON

The report cited people familiar with the matter and said US Defence Secretary Pete Hegseth had not given approval. The weapons include PAC-3 and PAC-2 interceptors. Some are held in European stockpiles and are being paid for by Ukraine's Western partners.

The pending allocation includes PAC-3 missiles scheduled for delivery between September and December. However, none of these shipments has received clearance, the newspaper reported. Around 20 older PAC-2 interceptors have also been allocated to Ukraine but are awaiting approval.

Ukraine has appealed for more air defence missiles as Russia continues missile and drone attacks. Patriot systems use these interceptors to destroy incoming threats and protect locations.

The Financial Times also reported that a plan to allow Ukraine to manufacture its Patriot interceptors has been delayed at the Pentagon.

A Pentagon spokesperson said there had been no change in Washington's policy on support for Ukraine but declined to comment on the transfers. An official said the department was continuing efforts to expand cooperation with European partners and Ukraine on the Patriot system.

Reuters said it could not verify the report, and the Pentagon did not respond to its request for comment.

Last month, the United States approved a sale of 500 PAC-3 missiles to Ukraine, worth about 2.1 billion US dollars.

Indo-Canadians prepare for Modi's proposed Toronto visit

TORONTO

Prime Minister Narendra Modi is expected to visit Canada on December 11 and 12. The proposed trip would be Modi's second visit to Toronto and comes as India and Canada work to rebuild ties after several years of diplomatic tensions.

Modi last visited Toronto in April 2015, when Stephen Harper was Canada's prime minister. Modi returned to Canada in June 2025 to attend the G7 summit in Alberta.

Canadian Prime Minister Mark Carney visited India in February 2026. According to the report, ministers from both countries had held more than a dozen visits and meetings since Carney took office in March 2025. The proposed December trip could build on those contacts and give both governments a chance to discuss trade, investment and other shared priorities.

Canada is home to more than 1.7 million people of Indian origin, according to the report. Community members hoped the visit would help restore trust and create opportunities for businesses, students and families in both countries, the report said.

Trade and investment

The proposed Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement aims to double trade between India and Canada by 2030, the report said. It identified energy, agriculture, education and technology as areas for closer cooperation. India could benefit from Canadian investment and resources, while Canada could gain greater access to India's market as it seeks to diversify its trade.

Bangladesh says Hasina must return in handcuffs

DHAKA

Bangladesh State Minister for Foreign Affairs Humaiun Kobir has said former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina can return only through extradition, in handcuffs and under strict surveillance. His remarks followed an announcement by Hasina's spokesperson that she planned to return from India on December 16, the country's Victory Day.

Speaking to reporters, Kobir said there was a difference between what Hasina wanted and what could happen. He rejected the idea that she could travel as an ordinary passenger and said the government would follow the extradition process.

Hasina's spokesperson, Syed Mozammel Ali, said she wanted the Bangladesh government to arrange a flight from Delhi to Dhaka on national carrier Biman Bangladesh Airlines. He argued that the government should help her return because she had been flown to India on a Bangladesh aircraft on August 5, 2024.Hasina fled to India after a student-led uprising ended her 15-year rule in August 2024. Bangladesh has since sought her extradition. New Delhi has said the request is being examined through channels.

In November 2025, Bangladesh's International Crimes Tribunal sentenced Hasina to death in absentia over crimes against humanity linked to the crackdown on protesters. She has denied the charges.

The tribunal's chief prosecutor, Md Aminul Islam, criticised her request for a government-arranged aircraft.

Kobir accused supporters of Hasina's Awami League of carrying out sporadic attacks to frighten people. He said the government was confident it could manage the situation and keep citizens informed.

Her proposed return has added to tensions between Dhaka and New Delhi.

NORFOLK

British police arrested two men after a reported break-in at the country home of Prince William and Catherine, Princess of Wales.

Norfolk Police said officers were called shortly before 6 pm on Monday after a report of suspicious activity at a property on the royal family's Sandringham estate in eastern England. Officers searched the area with police dogs, drones and a helicopter before arresting two men on suspicion of burglary and trespassing.

Police said the property was unoccupied when the incident took place. Both men remained in custody on Tuesday and had not been charged.

Qatar, US seek to ease tensions

WASHINGTON

Qatari Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Sheikh Mohammed bin Abdulrahman bin Jassim Al Thani and US Secretary of State Marco Rubio co-chaired talks between the two countries. Qatar's Foreign Ministry said officials and experts met in four working sessions to discuss steps to strengthen peace, security and economic cooperation.

The ministry said both countries continue to coordinate on the Gaza Peace Roadmap, including through talks with the Board of Peace. Rubio reaffirmed the US commitment to Qatar's security. Both sides pledged to protect freedom of navigation through the Strait of Hormuz, citing the waterway's importance for regional security, energy supplies and the global economy.

The two governments are also looking at ways to share more information, improve customs and border security, and expand training for law enforcement officers. Qatari and US agencies are working together to counter terrorism, terrorist financing and organised crime, the ministry said. The ministry said a joint military commission had met in September to discuss closer defence cooperation.

Al Thani praised US diplomatic efforts to resolve regional conflicts. A joint statement said discussions on defence, security, law enforcement and cultural ties were expected to continue into early 2027.

UN FEMICIDE REPORT

UN reports 47,000 killed by partners, relatives

VIENNA

About 47,000 women and girls worldwide were killed by intimate partners or family members in 2025, a UN report found.

UN Women and the UN Office on Drugs and Crime released their findings on Tuesday ahead of the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women. The agencies estimated that about 78,000 women and girls were intentionally killed worldwide in 2025. Intimate partners or family members were responsible for about 60 per cent of those deaths.

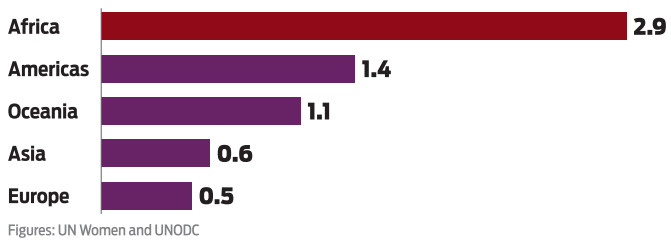

The figure for killings by partners or relatives works out to about 129 victims a day, or roughly five every hour. Annual estimates have ranged from 45,000 to 51,000 over recent years. The agencies said the pattern had changed little and that killings by partners or relatives remained a major share of intentional deaths among women and girls.

The report uses the term femicide for killings of women and girls linked to their gender. It said information on such killings outside the home or family setting remains limited. Those gaps make it difficult to measure the overall scale of femicide across regions or worldwide.

The findings show that the risk of being killed by a partner or relative varies substantially across regions. Africa had the highest estimated rate, while Europe had the lowest. Homicide rates have fallen faster, the agencies said.

Real Madrid near Bellingham contract extension

MADRID

Real Madrid is closing in on a new contract agreement with England midfielder Jude Bellingham, with the Spanish giants planning to extend his stay at the club until 2031.

The proposed deal is expected to significantly increase the 23-year-old's salary, potentially placing him among the highest-paid footballers in Europe. His wages could approach those of Brazilian forward Vinicius Junior, although French superstar Kylian Mbappe is expected to remain the club's highest earner.

Negotiations between Real Madrid and Bellingham have reportedly reached an advanced stage. The club began working on revised contract terms in September, despite his existing agreement running until June 2029.

Madrid are keen to reward the midfielder for his performances and contributions since arriving at the Santiago Bernabeu.

Bellingham currently earns approximately 15 million euros annually after tax. Under the proposed agreement, his earnings are expected to rise considerably, bringing him closer to Vinicius, who reportedly receives around 600,000 euros per week after tax.

The England international has made an impressive start to the ongoing season, scoring six goals and establishing himself as an important member of the starting line-up under head coach Jose Mourinho.

His influence has also earned praise from teammate Thibaut Courtois. The Belgian goalkeeper highlighted Bellingham's competitive mentality, leadership and determination, describing him as someone who constantly pushes himself and his teammates to win.

"Jude is someone who really wants to win. He's really a winner, and when he's not happy, he will make it known. He's also a leader on the field. He's a great player, a great mentality," Courtois said.

Courtois also praised his physical strength and work ethic, adding that Bellingham's presence improves the team's overall performance.

LAS VEGAS RACING THRILLER

Las Vegas Grand Prix delivers record overtaking

352 overtakes | 35 changes of lead | 0.639 sec winning margin

LAS VEGAS

Formula One's Las Vegas Grand Prix emerged as a sold-out success, with record overtaking numbers and intense wheel-to-wheel battles helping attract fans despite concerns over ticket demand ahead of the race.

Red Bull's Max Verstappen secured victory in a thrilling 50-lap contest, holding off McLaren's Lando Norris by just 0.639 seconds. Oscar Piastri completed the podium for McLaren, making it a closely contested race along the famous Las Vegas Strip.

According to Formula One, the race witnessed 352 overtakes and 35 changes of lead, with energy deployment, overtaking modes and long straights contributing to the action throughout the field.

Norris, who briefly took the lead after recovering from outside the points, described the contest as potentially the best Formula One race ever from a spectator's perspective. However, he questioned whether some overtakes were genuine racing manoeuvres because of the influence of battery deployment.

"From a racing point of view, from the outside, I'm sure it probably was the best race ever in Formula One," Norris said.

He acknowledged that the use of boost sometimes made overtaking easier but maintained that the overall competition remained entertaining.

The event had faced uncertainty over ticket sales, with unusually cool weather and already-decided championship battles expected to affect attendance. Kimi Antonelli had secured the drivers' championship, while Mercedes had clinched the constructors' title before arriving in Las Vegas.

Although rain disrupted Thursday's practice, clear conditions on Friday and Saturday helped fans fill the grandstands.

Norris also suggested that racing could improve further under the proposed 2030 engine regulations. The FIA has announced an agreed framework for a lighter, simpler 2.1-litre turbocharged V8 engine, sustainable fuels and limited hybridisation.

Real Kashmir secure first win of season

SRINAGAR

Real Kashmir FC registered their first victory of the Indian Football League 2026–27 season with a convincing 3-1 win over Dempo SC at the TRC Stadium in Srinagar on Monday. Goals from Rohen Singh, Alain Eyenga and Marcus Joseph secured all three points for the Snow Leopards, while Rowllin Borges scored for the visitors.

The result lifted Real Kashmir to seventh place in the standings with five points. Real Kashmir goalkeeper Susnata Malik was named Player of the Match for saves that helped the hosts protect their advantage.

Real Kashmir started strongly and took the lead in the 19th minute. Lalawmpuia Sailo drove into the penalty area, beat his marker and set up Rohen Singh, who finished with his left foot past Dempo goalkeeper Subhajit Bhattacharjee. The hosts continued to press, and Marcus Joseph came close to adding another in the 23rd minute, but Subhajit made a save.

The home side doubled its lead in the 33rd minute after a short corner. Dempo failed to clear the ball, which reached Alain Eyenga, and the forward guided it into the net to make it 2-0. Dempo responded two minutes later. Laximanrao Rane sent in a cross from the left, and after Malik got a hand to the delivery, Rowllin Borges converted from close range.

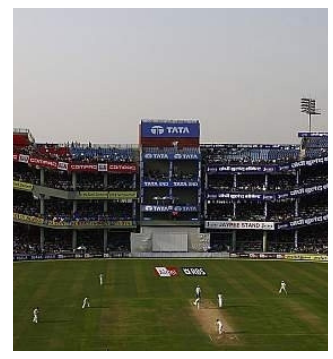

Dempo carried that momentum into the second half and enjoyed possession. Borges tested Malik with a free-kick in the 54th minute before the goalkeeper produced another diving save to deny his header four minutes later. The visitors continued to search for an equaliser through Rane, captain Richmond Owusu and Arnold Oliveira, but Real Kashmir remained organised at the back. Eyenga also made an important block to stop Oliveira in the 70th minute.

Real Kashmir threatened on the counter, with Subhajit denying Sailo and Joseph in the 80th minute. The hosts settled the contest in the 87th minute. Thabiso Brown collected a diagonal pass and laid the ball off for substitute Lalrokima, who moved into the box and squared it across goal. Joseph finished the move to make it 3-1.

Dempo continued to push forward, but Real Kashmir held firm until the final whistle to claim their first win of the season. Malik's performance proved crucial as the Snow Leopards turned a strong start into a team victory.

DUBAI

Scotland captain Kathryn Bryce made strong gains in the ICC rankings after capping off strong performances in the ICC Women's Emerging Nations Trophy.

Bryce jumped four spots to move third in the T20I rankings for all-rounders after completing the tournament with 232 runs and eight wickets. Scotland narrowly missed out on a place in the final.

Bryce was in stellar touch during Scotland's last match in the tournament against Zimbabwe as she made a 48-ball 69 and took two wickets to star in a 74-run win.

This saw her gain four places in the T20I rankings, the highest she has ever been in any rankings category, along with her third place in the T20I all-rounders' rankings five years back in May 2021.

She now stands only behind West Indies captain Hayley Matthews (first) and New Zealand skipper Melie Kerr (second) as Bryce aims to become the first Scottish player to be ranked No.1 in any rankings category.

Her strong outing with the bat also saw Bryce jump 27 places in the T20I rankings for the batters as she moved to equal 18th. Ireland skipper Gaby Lewis also gained two spots to move to 11th in the batting chart.

Meanwhile, Australia's veteran Beth Mooney stays on top of the batting list as she has a narrow advantage over South Africa's Laura Wolvaardt. UAE skipper Esha Oza moved up eight slots to equal 29th, while Ireland opener Amy Hunter jumped six places to equal 29th. Sri Lankan batter Vishmi Gunaratne also made significant strides as she moved 10 places to reach 51st.

Meanwhile, there was more joy for Scotland in the rankings as bowlers also reaped rewards. Left-arm spinner Kirstie Gordon moved 23 places up to reach 10th after taking 12 wickets at the Emerging Nations Trophy event.
